VERY IMPORTANT FROM NICARAGUA.

DESPERATE FIGHTING.

General Walker Successful in a Series of Battles.

The Costa Rican General Canas Defeated with Heavy Loss.

A FOUR DAYS' BATTLE AT MASSAYA.

Granada Burnt, and the Seat of Government Removed to Rivas.

Naval Battle—A Costa Rican Brig-of-war Blown Up.

News from California—The Vote for President.

NEW-ORLEANS, Friday, Dec. 12.

The steamship Texas, with California dates to the 6th of November and San Juan dates to the 6th inst., has arrived here.

The steamship Tennessee left San Juan for New-York with 400,000 in treasure.

The news from Nicaragua is highly important. General WALKER has been successful in a series of battles with the Central Americans.

On the 10th ult. General HORNSBY, with two hundred more defeated eleven hundred of the enemy, under the Costa Rican General CANAS. The enemy lost 200, while HORNSBY had only 8 killed and 11 wounded.

Four days' fighting at MASSAYA had ended in the entire defeat of the enemy.

General WALKER had returned to Granada, and after giving three days' notice of his intention to allow time for the removal of valuables, fired the place, and burning a portion of it.

The inhabitants of Granada had removed to Rivas, with all their effects, which will hereafter be the capital of Nicaragua.

A naval battle had taken place between the Nicaraguan war schooner Granada, Capt. FAYSOUX, and a Costa Rican brig-of-war three times the size of the Granada. The Costa Rican vessel was blown up, and all on board other perished.

It is estimated that the enemy have lost 2,000 men in the various battles, since October.

The vote of California, for President, stands as follows:

BUCHANAN, 60,000.
FILLMORE, 45,000.
FREMONT, 19,000.
BUCHANAN's majority over both, 6,000.

The Democrats also obtained a majority in both branches of the State Legislature.

The California markets generally were dull.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Special Messenger from Kansas—Remonstrance Against the Admission of Whitfield—Reopening of the Case, &c.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 12.

A Special Messenger from Kansas has arrived here, with a memorial, numerously signed, remonstrating against the admission of WHITFIELD.

The Messenger reports all quiet in the Territory. The land sales were proceeding satisfactorily to the squatters. Gov. FRYE' troops had been disbanded, and the Gov. had left Leompton for Leavenworth, on his way to Nicaragua.

The Whitfield case will probably be reopened soon in the ordinary form of a contested election. The memorial from Kansas on the subject very earnestly protests against the admission of WHITFIELD as the Delegate, upon the distinct ground that he is neither the choice of the people nor legally chosen.

It turns out upon investigation, that the election under which he claims to have been chosen Delegate, and by virtue of which Governor GRAHY gave him the certificate, was held without authority or form of law, either valid or invalid; in other words, that there was no law, either Federal or Territorial, under which the Governor was authorized to call the special election.

Under these circumstances the proclamation for the election was a mere voluntary act, of no vitality, and the election itself is claimed to have no more authority than would have been possessed by an ordinary town meeting. If this is maintained, of course WHITFIELD must stand before Congress in the precise attitude which KANSAS occupied last session,—claiming admission as the Representative of the people of the Territory, although not chosen under due form of law. KANSAS's claim on that ground was rejected last year, and, of course, no honest man who voted against him then can vote to sustain WHITFIELD now.

If the case is presented to the House again in this new aspect, it is reasonable to expect that a number of those who voted to sustain WHITFIELD the other day on the primary question of his admission, pending the contest over his seat, will vote against his right to retain it, after due investigation has been had.

The President is awaiting the arrival of Senator MASON, Chairman of the Naval Committee, ere he sends to the Senate the nominations to fill the vacancies in the Navy. S.

A New Pacific Railroad Bill.

It is understood that another Pacific Railroad bill is about to be introduced in the House. It is on a magnificent scale, and is entitled "A bill to provide for the construction of Railroads and Telegraph communications from the Mississippi river and Lake Superior to the Pacific Ocean."

Three main roads are projected, viz:—One from a point on the Mississippi river, South of lat. 36° to San Francisco, with a branch to San Diego;—another from some point on the Missouri river, North of latitude 40°, and south of lat. 42°, to San Francisco, with a branch to Marysville, Sacramento, Stockton, and the Pueblo de Los Angelos;—and the third from some point on the lake shore to Puget's Sound, with a branch to the mouth of the Willamette river.

Towards these routes, the bill proposes to grant alternate sections of land for each mile of railroad, the lands to be selected by the parties named in the bill. [illegible] shall be withdrawn from sale, or entry, or pre-emption; and if required shall be surveyed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: provided the parties named in the bill shall not be compelled to take any waste lands, and shall pay to the United States, twenty-five cents per acre: provided also that no title shall vest in them, any further than the roads are extended to completion.

Further, they shall deposit with the Secretary of [illegible] the track, the Secretary of the Interior [illegible] commissioners named the work and [illegible] thereof, and in lieu thereof there [illegible] on the road for that amount [illegible] the line is completed.

[illegible] United States agree to pay [illegible] station of the mails on [illegible] and for ten years thereafter [illegible] President [illegible] of the State of [illegible] right of [illegible] that time paid for, shall be forfeited to the United States.

The right of way, to the width of 400 feet, through the public lands, is proposed to be granted.

Further, six sections of land per mile is proposed to be granted to the following roads, under the reservation that any adjacent territory granted to States or companies, intended for their use and benefit, shall be deducted therefrom, viz:

South Western Branch Pacific Railroad; Iron Mountain Railroad; Cairo and Fulton Railroad; Memphis and Little Rock Railroad; Mississippi Railroad; and Memphis Railroad; Vicksburg and Shreveport Railroad; New-Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad; connecting with the first-named route.

Pacific Railroad; Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad; Burlington, Keokuk and Missouri Railroad; Philadelphia, Fort Wayne and Platt Valley Railroad; Mississippi and Missouri Railroad; Iowa Central Air Line Railroad; Dubuque and Pacific Railroad; North Iowa, Minnesota and Nebraska Railroad; connecting with the second-named route.

Transcontinental and North Iowa, Minnesota and Nebraska Railroad connecting with the third named route.

Each of these grants is under the proviso that fifty miles of road shall be completed within three years from the passage of this act, and the balance within five years thereafter; the United States Mails shall be carried at the usual price for such service.

Further provision makes it the duty of companies named to construct their roads, &c., in a good, substantial manner, with uniform gauge.

All the property of said companies in the Territories is to be exempt from taxation, as long as they remain Territories. None of said companies shall construct their roads through the lands of any Indian tribes without the consent of said tribes.

They must sell and convey half the lands granted, within five years, and the balance within ten years from the issuing of the patent from the United States, and all lands not sold at the expiration of ten years, shall be forfeited to the United States.

Mr. Case on "Squatter Sovereignty"—Mr. Hale's Speech in Reply—The Democratic "Free-Kansas" Dodge in Pennsylvania—The Murder of Americans by the Guatemalians, &c.

Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Dec. 11, 1856.

MR. CASS' SPEECH.

Mr. CASS, to-day, made another speech in explanation of his doctrine of "Squatter Sovereignty," which he maintains to be the principle of the Nebraska bill; and in the House Mr. OTE, of South Carolina, addressed himself to the task of showing that it was all a humbug and delusion. When doctors differ, who shall decide? This brief statement of these two speeches is a practical commentary upon the claim of the President and of the Democratic Party, that the late election has disposed of the "disturbing element," and definitely settled the controversy in regard to Slavery in the Territories. I don't see that Mr. CASS makes the doctrine any clearer—indeed his effort, like that of FRUM's yesterday, seemed to be the elevation of a sort of tight-rope avenue between the Northern and Southern interpretations of "the principle of the Kansas and Nebraska bill," over which Northern Democrats might hope to walk unscathed by the fires of Slavery South, and unchilled by the blasts of Freedom in the North. The business is evidently an unpleasant one, as Father GRINDUS expresses it, "a sort of vibration between heaven and hell."

MR. HALE'S REPLY.

Mr. HALE answered Mr. CASS on the instant, and delivered one of the best of the many good speeches which he has made in the Senate. He vindicated the Higher Law, at which the Senator from Michigan indulged in a fling, and compelled him to a silent admission that he dare not repudiate that law, but that he acknowledges it every day of his life—a law in which all just human enactments have their foundation, and which has been gloriously illustrated, through all ages, by martyrs who preferred to follow its lead, even to the scaffold and the stake. He also commented with severity upon the claim that the election has indorsed the KANSAS-and-NEBRASKA bill.

MR. BIGLER AND FREE KANSAS.

Mr. BIGLER interrupted Mr. HALE with the inquiry whether, in all his speeches during the late campaign, he did not hold that the election of BUCHANAN would vindicate FRUM's Administration, and perpetuate his policy? "Certainly I did," responded Mr. H.; "and I was contradicted just as often as I came within ten feet of a Buchanan man." He then exhibited to the Senate a handbill posted in Pennsylvania during the canvass, calling upon the people to turn out at a mass meeting in behalf of BUCHANAN and BRECKINRIDGE and "FREE KANSAS." At this meeting the Hon. Senator (BIGLER) was advertised to speak.

In answer to this, Mr. BIGLER declared that the Democrats in Pennsylvania, in derision of the Republicans who said so much about Freedom in Kansas, used to say that they (the Democrats) were for Free Kansas, meaning that they were for letting KANSAS do just as she pleased. This new dodge was received with rather doubtful favor in any quarter. Subsequently, being closely pressed by Mr. HALE, the Pennsylvania Senator was careful to relieve Mr. BUCHANAN entirely from any responsibility for the Republican doctrine of his speech the other day, and to say, in effect, that his Southern friends need not be frightened yet, for, perhaps, Mr. BUCHANAN was less of a Tartar than he had led them to suppose. The debate of to-day will do good.

THE MURDER OF AMERICAN CITIZENS IN NICARAGUA.

It will be remembered that at the time of a recent attack by Guatemalian troops upon Granada, Nicaragua, Rev. DAVID WHELDEN, a Methodist Missionary, and other peaceable Americans, were barbarously murdered, without a shadow of pretext. It was supposed that our Government would take some steps to secure reparation for this outrage; but up to the present time I cannot learn that the President manifests the slightest disposition to do anything of the kind. On the contrary it is impossible to obtain from any member of the Administration the least intimation that the case is deemed worthy a moment's attention. It was my good fortune to make Mr. WHELDEN's acquaintance on board the steamer Illinois, when on my way to Peru, via the Isthmus, a year ago last May. I remember him as a modest, quiet, unassuming gentleman, full of zeal in his holy calling, and with no ambition except to do good to his fellow-men. He was at that time stationed over a congregation at Aspinwall. Subsequently, I am informed, he went to Nicaragua by the desire of the Methodist Society, with which he was connected, because it offered a wider field of usefulness, for which he was deemed especially fitted, by his previous experience in that neighborhood. And here, while fulfilling his mission of peace and good will, the half-savage soldiery robbed him of life, and his dependent family of their only means of support.

Is it possible that his death is to be unatoned? Is there to be no provision exacted for his widow and orphans? Greytown was bombarded, and many innocent property destroyed, in atonement for alleged outrages against the Transit Company and their wealthy corporation. Is the life of a poor Methodist missionary of less consequence in the eyes of the President?—and is the helpless condition of the fatherless ones less worthy of consideration than the coffers of VANDERBILT & Co.? Can't we have another bombardment? The flames of burning huts and hovels might furnish a little "golden glory" for the sunset of an Administration which began with such brilliant promises of protection to the American citizen wheresoever he might wander abroad.

PURCHASE OF TERRITORY ON THE ISTHMUS.

The statement is entirely erroneous that Mr. MARCY has ever considered the proposition to purchase any portion of the territory of New-Granada. The Secretary denies also that Mr. HOGBLEY, President of the Panama Railroad, ever made any such proposition or suggestion to him. Neither of these gentlemen have had the least idea of the procurement of exclusive control over the Isthmus. Mr. MARCY's aim is simply to make the transit perfectly safe at all times as the free highway of all nations, and when the documents connected with the pending negotiations with New-Granada come to be published, this will be fully apparent. These facts are important, because they [illegible] the anticipation of any future antagonism between the United States and Great Britain with reference to the Isthmus of Panama. There is and can be no good ground for such apprehensions. It is unfortunate, however, that attempts to embarrass the negotiation should have been made by the circulation of the story of an intention or desire on the [illegible]

ROMANTIC RASCALITY.

A Rich Among the Ladies—Something about Matrimonial Advertisements and Governesses.

A great scoundrel has left the City of late. He sailed from Philadelphia for Australia, viâ Europe, on Wednesday of last week, to avoid detention by the Police. He has left behind sorrowing and forsaken a host of women, who, enthrall by his charms, lost their hearts and—some of them,—a considerable quantity of money, besides other things of more or less value.

The character of whom we are speaking is decidedly a great man; he is even more, a perfect "gentleman," smooth of tongue, elegant in dress, with a handsome face and a Roman nose. What wonder, then, that he succeeded with the ladies, high and low, widow and maid, as but few men ever before succeeded!

He is a man of varied attainments, but without a moustache! He had what was better, (so he said,) a plantation well stocked with fat niggers in Louisiana, a handsome income and a carte blanche to the best society of the South. So when he came North he was not in want of society. A man of such standing is always appreciated, especially by the ladies, appreciating souls! The widows all boast him. And no wonder. He stood nearly six feet, erect and graceful, with fine wavy black hair, slightly tinged with gray, a piercing black eye, and, most bewitching of all, such a Roman nose. Yes, it must have been a Roman nose, for all his lady admirers (a perfect legion) declared it so, though not a few ugly and jealous fellows averred it to be decidedly Israelitish. He was a little old for some people, perhaps. He gave his age as 40; but he might have easily passed for 38, and, after all, what are a few years in a man's age, compared with a fine plantation and a classical nose! So the young ladies were not indifferent to his charms; but the widows, especially if they possessed a little capital left them by their dear, departed husbands, were more acceptable. Not that he cared for the money!—Oh, no; not at all;—he had plenty of his own; but as he was wont to observe, in his gay manner, money was never unacceptable, even to those who needed it least.

Our hero, though a perfect gentleman—a linguist, a lecturer and a physician—had what some might fancy to be a rather pretentious manner. That is, he would get acquainted with a lady, whatever at first might be her objections. But such a head, and such a nose as the Doctor's could not fail of making an impression, sooner or later. And he talked so divinely, too; was so poetical, so sympathising, so frank, so graceful, and again, at times, so sad, when speaking of his dear, departed wife. "Ah!" he would say, with a sigh, "he who has once known the happiness of a happy marriage, but lily bears the solitude of singleness.

"The dear man," the widow addressed would inwardly exclaim, as she gazed on his handsome countenance. Sympathy was already aroused, and sympathy in such cases is but a step from love. That step was soon made, and then came—the sequel.

The career of the Doctor (for so we will call him) in this City was peculiarly romantic, and displayed a talent so great and varied as to be worthy of a more extensive fame than it at present possesses.

We have been at some trouble to gain the necessary information to this end, but found the task an exceedingly difficult one. We have learned enough, however, to give some idea of the Doctor and his extraordinary exploits.

He gives to Philadelphia the honor of his birthplace. How long he lived in that city, or when he first left it, is not known. It is certain, however, that in 1850, and before, he was residing in the State of Louisiana. Certain it is, that on the evening of the 6th of August, 1850, he was married in the town of C——, Louisiana, to a young and lovely woman named MARY S——. With her he lived probably for some two years—for, in or about 1853, he reappeared in Philadelphia, where he soon made quite a sensation. He soon succeeded, by false representations, in winning the confidence of Mrs. W——, a rich widow of that place, who finally married him, fully persuaded that she had made a happy choice. But her happiness was of short duration.

Three days after this wedding, the bride and bridegroom quarreled. The "Rich Southern planter" and happy bridegroom wanted some money. The rich and happy bride refused to give him any, whereat she was assailed by the bridegroom, who, putting a pistol to her head, threatened to blow her brains out unless she handed out the needful. The threat did not avail, and the bridegroom left the premises and never again returned to either. Thus the charm was broken. The disconsolate bride grieved, and would not be pacified. The inquiries that were made brought to light the fact that her husband had another and a lawful wife (and child) living in Louisiana; that he also had a female friend with whom he had been living illegally, in Philadelphia; and that previous to his departure, he had contrived, by forging his wife's name, to obtain the sum of $1,500.

Information of this circumstance was given to the Police, and a warrant was issued for the gay Doctor's apprehension, but he had fled—to Mexico, it is said. The deceived lady quietly obtained a divorce, and the matter was kept as still as possible from the vulgar public. The lady subsequently married Dr. P——, with whom she lives happily.

Wherever the Doctor took refuge from Philadelphia he did not long remain, for in the latter part of 1853 he made his appearance in New-York City, and have began to play at his old game. How he succeeded in palming himself off for what he was not may be easily guessed. His polished manner, fine appearance and unbounded assurance, carried him successfully through, and made him a great favorite with all the ladies whose acquaintance he contrived to make. One of his admirers spoke of him thus, through some obliging newspaper:

"Many ignorant people imagine that in New-York we have no nobility. This is a mistake—we have a Baron. I don't know whether he is the first or the last of them (or both.) I can only certify to his existence. There he is, and a more baronial figure I would not wish to see. He is very handsome—he knows it. He is very learned—he knows that too. He is very skillful—he will tell you so himself. Although he is not clad in 'complete steel' he has the instruments upon him; if he has not his lance, he has his lancet, which does him better service. His appearance is very martial, aristocratic and kingly—yes, I may well say kingly, for he has many subjects, and they are ruled so well that they are called 'patients.'"

One poor creature—JOSEPHINE by name—must have been in raptures with him. She is described as having drank in every word that fell from his lips. In his presence she was happy, and was wont to gaze admiringly upon his classic countenance while he read aloud to her. The deep tones of his voice fell like sweet music upon her ear. In his presence the hours fled by unheeded, and the evening sped like a dream of pleasure.

Poor JOSEPHINE! Her dreams of pleasure were abruptly ended. What became of her—whether she committed suicide or fell in love with some one else we are unable to state.

The handsome doctor turned the ladies' heads completely. JANE, another confiding one to whom he was betrothed at the same time, thus expressed her feelings confidentially to a female friend:

"To be together is for us to be at once as free as in solitude, or gay as in company. We talk, I believe, all day; to talk to each other is but a mere animated or audible thinking. All my confidence is bestowed on him, all his confidence is devoted to me. We are precisely united in character; perfect concord is the result."

Ridiculous confidence! brief consent! JANE soon mourned for her great loss.

Another of his lady admirers having chided him with coldness, or some greater offence, she soft-toned replies: "Yes; but if you had looked into my heart! . . . You made a hollow bright as a rainbow above, around that dungeon. Oh, where my heart was stopped!"

But the fellow was insatiable. He could not obtain victims enough by his ordinary (or rather extraordinary) behaviour, with society, so he betook himself to the advertising columns of the daily papers. He corresponded with every lady advertising for a situation as governess, by representing himself to be [illegible] ladies, all of whom he victimized to a greater or less extent, by obtaining loans of money from them, &c. He also perused the matrimonial department of the papers, to a large extent, and by this means, also, he made the acquaintance of many foolish women, every one of whom it is hardly necessary to say he most shamefully deceived. He assumed in his advertisements various names, such as Mr. Stanley, Chester, Calvin Luther, &c., &c. To a lady, with whom he effected a correspondence in relation to an advertisement for Governess he thus writes:

MY DEAR MADAM: Your esteemed note was only come into my hands this day, and I regret that an unexpected absence from New-York prevented me from seeing you as arranged on Monday last. I assure you, Madam, the favorable influence of our interview was mutual, for you possess all those lovable attributes of person and mind, so calculated, so essentially necessary to win and allure a man of refined organization, and one who seeks that adaptation of nature which can only give birth to true and sincere affections. I will candidly admit, (for candor is the twin sister of confidence) that in connection with a governess for my child, I am anxious to secure a friend for myself, and would be delighted if you would entertain my views. If, after an interview, we find that adaptation of natures which would foster a harmonious understanding, an arrangement could be entered into, I promise integrity of purpose shall mark my intercourse with you.

A line in reply, addressed to the Astor-House, will oblige, Yours respectfully, J. C. S.

Many he deceived in this way, but more, during the years 1852 and 1854, by advertising for a wife under various names. The exact number of his victims obtained in both years is very large. He deceived Mrs. the Governess, dodge Mrs. C., of Clinton-place; Mrs. S., of East Thirty-seventh-street; Mrs. P., of Broadway; Mrs. D., of Twenty-fifth-street; Miss S., of ——, and many others. He first gained the confidence of these ladies, won their affections, proposed to all of them and was by all accepted. They all, however, found him out before the day set apart for their wedding; some in one way and some in another. He was at one time engaged to half a dozen ladies in the City at the same, while his wife and infant were suffering from sickness and destitution in Louisiana. Three of the ladies to whom he was thus engaged, were having their wedding-dresses made with the same dressmaker at the same time. They all met at the dressmaker's one day, and being mutually acquainted, entered into a conversation about the auspicious event to which they were so eagerly looking, when the secret came out that they were all engaged to the same man. A terrible scene ensued. Cologne and cold water were found requisite. This exposé gave rise to a great deal of talk in private circles, but neither of the ladies felt disposed to prosecute and punish the villain for fear of the publicity which they would thereby gain. One of these ladies having learned the whole of this Doctor's rascality, corresponded with his wife, and ascertained that she (the wife) was so destitute as to be actually compelled to pawn her dresses and wedding ring to gain the necessaries of life.

Touched by her suffering, the lady wrote to the Doctor, imploringly, saying that she would forgive her own injuries if he would but take care of his wife and child, whose suffering she eloquently depicted. The brute paid no heed, but continued, with coolness and effrontery, his villainous career.

He continued to insert his matrimonial advertisements, and by means of the following unique one,

A WIDOWER of middle age, of good social position, cultivated mind, refined organization, warm and affectionate nature, and in every way calculated by habits and association to diffuse a genial and happy influence in the conjugal relationship he aspires to, whose "personal" and style is unexceptionable, and pecuniary position easy, would be pleased to make the acquaintance of a lady possessing attributes and qualities in some measure approximating his own. To such who feel disposed to waive conventional prejudice and act independently in a matter involving the highest aim, as well as the most important and vital considerations to their domestic happiness, he would invite a confidential correspondence, pledging a manly and honorable consideration at his hands, and assuring them the integrity of his property. Address, SALVIN LUTHER, Broadway Post-Office.

A LETTER SENT A WOMAN-HAWK.

SIR: I have received your note and hasten to answer it. I will remark, in the first place, that you have only done me justice in giving me credit for sincerity, that and frankness being two of my principal characteristics, although the leading trait of my character, and the master passion of my soul is an intense yearning for affection. I crave sympathy and kindness, and would deeply repay such by the devotion of a heart formed to feel and reciprocate every tender emotion. A heart capable of experiencing a love unmingled with selfish considerations, whose chief gratification would arise from the welfare and happiness of the beloved object, with whom a hut would be a palace, and a wilderness as the garden of Eden. Of course, to such a nature nothing would be more delightful than the pleasures of a home. In my opinion home illuminated by affection is the dearest of earthly blessings, and must ever be the centre of all my wishes and desire.

The following original lines will convey some idea of my feelings on the subject:

Give me to dwell mid Alpine snow, amid the tropic bloom,
Or where the gloomy forest spreads its deep sequestered wilds,
Still, mid these fair congenial scenes, if thou I love be there,
My heart, O Love, shall fondly rest, within thy sacred sphere.

I am fond of music and poetry, and have been from my childhood an humble votary of the muses. I am a passionate admirer of everything that is beautiful in Nature and Art. I am particularly fond of fine scenery, and the contemplation of exquisite paintings and statues always affords me the greatest pleasure. I have given you this slight account of my feelings, sentiments, as a sort of preface to our introduction. I shall be happy to grant your request for an interview to-morrow. I shall be at the Hamilton Ferry, (New-York,) in the ladies' room between 3½ and 4 o'clock in the afternoon. I shall stand or sit by the window fronting the street, and that you may recognise me will describe my dress, which on this occasion will be black or pink, with a red shawl, green shirred crape bonnet, and black lace veil; and that you may more easily distinguish me will hold a flower in my hand. I wish you to come up and address me by my name, although I think it would be better to watch my coming, (I will be punctual;) and speak before I enter the room. I will then take a walk with you up Broadway, or, if not too cold, on the Battery. If the weather should prove unfavorable to-morrow, or anything should occur to prevent my coming, I shall not be able to see you on Friday, but will meet you at the same time, on Saturday, or should that be stormy, on the first fair day following. Wishing, in conclusion, that the interview may be mutually agreeable, I remain yours, in sincerity,

TUESDAY, October, 1853. PAULINE.

PERRESVILLE, Sept. 18, 1853.

To Mr. J. C. S.—In reply to Mr. STANLEY's last letter, the writer begs leave to inform him that she will be pleased to see him on Tuesday morning next, (at 10 o'clock,) at No. 1290 ——. In regard to Mr. STANLEY's remarks concerning first impressions, disappointment, &c., &c., the writer will merely add that in the opinion of a high-minded woman, a gentleman's attractions consist in his high moral character, his good sense, refinement, &c., &c. These attributes, delineated on the face of the possessor as they usually are, render it sufficiently attractive. The lady also anticipates a disappointment on the gentleman's part, for his ardent, poetical imagination has possibly invested her with personal beauty, and therein she will "be found wanting," as nature has given her only a small share. She feels greatly obliged to Mr. STANLEY for his kind assurances that "nothing shall in any way compromise her," and feels that she can confide in his honor. S. A. W.

N. B.—Should there be any mistake about the number, (tho' I think not,) Mr. S. will immediately find it by reference to a directory. Directed,

Mr. J. C. S.,
Post-Office, New-York.

HARTFORD, Sept. 5, 1853.

MR. CHESTER—Dear Sir: Yours of the 27th instant came into my hands this morning of the 29th. It gives me much pleasure to reply to an epistle fraught with so much affection and tenderness, which was called forth from a stranger by a simple note from my pen, which was written almost expressly for the novelty of the thing. But as it pleased you to answer it, and esteem it a pleasure to respond to the sentiments contained therein, the frankness with which you communicate your ideas and express your wishes, gives me a favorable impression, for I am inclined to believe they come from a kind and true heart; and he confiding in the sincerity of your communication I am inclined to think our tastes and feelings are not dissimilar, and should have no objections to a personal acquaintance. I am rather above the medium height, with blue eyes, &c., was born in 1832. I anticipate visiting New-York and the Crystal Palace about the 20th of the month, in company with my sister and her husband.

Yours with sincerity,

Until the completion of the submarine connection between Newfoundland and Ireland, the Company, we understand, make an effort to obtain the news from the steamers as they pass the point [illegible] which point to New-York [illegible] and over which communication [illegible] with great regularity for some years past [illegible] the office of the American Telegraph Company [illegible] well-served. The Boston Government [illegible] an application of Mr. Rives, the President of the Company, for permission to land the cable on the mail steamers off Cape Race, N. F., and Queenstown, Ireland, say through C. S. [illegible], Treasury Chambers, London, as follows:

"I am commanded by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to acquaint you that their Lordships have received the letter of the 14th ult. [illegible] that other communications with Mr. Gurney on the feasibility of the plan, and requesting from him certain [illegible] that it might be carried into effect without in any way retarding the contract now in progress, [illegible] of opinion that the necessary directions may be given for the purpose, subject to the following conditions:

1. That the mail steamers shall not be delayed.
2. That they shall not be required to alter the course they would otherwise have taken.
3. That no responsibility shall attach to the ships or to the Government.
4. That the companies shall make such arrangements in reference to the receipt and despatch of messages as shall be satisfactory to the Treasury in order to secure equal advantages to all persons using the Telegraph."

Jacob Little and the Board of Brokers.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

You have "hit the nail on the head" in your this morning's notice of JACOB LITTLE's operations. Having, to a considerable extent, been a sufferer by his operations, I am now only interested in knowing whether the Brokers will become practically the accomplices of Mr. LITTLE, by restoring him to their Board. The question is "in a nut-shell." Mr. LITTLE sells Stock Short. When he sells, he has been paying constantly for months past. Now, the tide having turned, Mr. LITTLE [illegible] his contracts. We lose our money. The [illegible] "serves us right." But is this [illegible] play the game over? The determination of the Board will establish the character of the Board of Brokers. A BROKER SUBSCRIBER.

Another Vessel Abandoned with Cotton Wounded.

Brig Gen. T. Ward, Capt. Ross, from Galveston, Texas, arrived at New-York yesterday, with the Captain and crew of schooner E. W. Godfrey, from Virginia, with pitch pine lumber, which was discovered in a sinking condition on the 6th inst. The schooner lost her mainmast and sails about a week since in a severe northwest gale, after leaving Rappahannock; she was driven to sea and became water-logged, in which condition she was found, 14 days from land, and the Captain and crew immediately taken off and brought to this port.

Letter from Wm. H. Hamilton, Esq.

To the Editor of the Evening Post:

SIR: Will you allow me to inquire, in this, a personal discussion which I certainly never initiated? The Boston Journal asserts that I am not, if I mistake the character of an American citizen is to be determined, it shall be discussed fairly.

My family, all of whom are of Carolina blood, were formerly thirty years, a respectable and respected inhabitant of that city—a slaveholder himself, and connected by marriage with distinguished families in several of the Southern States. He took a prominent part, in conjunction with his friends, the late Judge LEE and the living Mr. PRESTON, in the [illegible] which the soundest citizens of South Carolina approved upon the ratification of the Constitution of 1789, and his articles in defence of the Union and the Constitution which appeared in the Charleston Courier, at that time, were the signature of "Hamilton," are well remembered by all persons who were then familiar with South Carolina politics. By the [illegible] my relations still remain at the South, [illegible] of them Slaveholders. What any [illegible] must therefore be content to [illegible] Carolinian, though I can never be [illegible] ter of a Slavery extensionist [illegible] unionist in the interest of the institution.

I would willingly rest my title to the character of a patriotic citizen of the United States [illegible] frines which are set forth in the article which [illegible] cited the indignation of the [illegible] my own State, and upon the temper to which they are discussed.

And I am, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
WM. HENRY HAMILTON.

BEEKMAN HOUSE, NEW-YORK, Dec. 11, 1856.

P. S. It is perhaps proper for me to state that I am not, and never have been a clergyman. I studied theology as well as law in Cambridge, and graduated at Harvard College, but as I have never been ordained nor been called to the bar, I do not deem it appropriate to myself the honors of either profession.

An Immortal Acknowledged.

From the Boston Post.

MR. GRANVILLE WETHERBEE, the lady who he married belonged to another, has left the United States and [illegible] the Continent, and [illegible] that she was married. It appears that [illegible] name; that she was never married; that she has not [illegible] the imposition she had practiced upon [illegible] the numerous friends she had made in this city [illegible] has taken up her residence somewhere [illegible] in Canada.

[illegible] by an owner the best qualities and winning among their many fine qualities. A [illegible] head of Innocence, modeled, we are told, [illegible] out through a [illegible] out with [illegible] son's daughter—not a very remarkable coincidence, perhaps, as such would behaves this characteristic. It is an instinct of intelligence, like that "peace" of the Lady in Comus, "which goodness bosoms ever. These figures are purity itself.

This chastity of nature is again seen sublimated in expression, in different degrees, in the medallions, A Dream of the Spirit's Flight, partaking of immortality, leaving "the warm precincts of the cheerful day," but "casting one longing, lingering look behind," and in The Sleeping Peri, which is worthy to rest above the ashes of virgin innocence in the monumental chapel of a cathedral. Sleep, the image of death, is here the entrance to Heaven. The conception of the countenance is exquisite in few almost to waken the form which, in its weariness, is again typical of the grave. But the sculptor need not go to poet's "Peris" and "the Mythology of the East", for such a creation. The original is passing away from Earth daily. Ask the sympathetic mothers and sisters who cling to the room where this is separately shown if it is not so!

We pass to Morning and Evening, two of the medallions in which Mr. PALMER excels. It is the same female figure at the beginning as at the close of day, attended by a star, keeping an appointment with the moon, issuing from or retiring from her cloudy bed. The eagerness of movement in Morning—the parted lip, the passionate sensibility, excited by the keen air of the new-born day—the Greek type of countenance, the rushing hair, the peculiar curve of the eyelid; and again, in Evening, the folded eye, the meek bowing to rest, but with the promise of a kindling resurrection—these are images of life itself in these spirited creations.

There is a Sappho in alt-relief, a worn, consumed figure, literal in its agony and suffering.

A bust of the distinguished citizen EBAZTUS COMSTOCK, life-like in its traits, of an elevated but natural expression, closes our enumeration of every object in the catalogue.

There is not only rare excellence in this collection, but rare promise of excellence to come. Let the artist adhere to his first mistress, Nature. He has imagination and poetry in invention. Let him cherish and cultivate them not the less; but let him remember, in his pursuit of the ideal, that this much-abused essence is only the better life, the true genius of the actual, the real in its perfection. It is to be found, in particulars, in nature, and happily, in the full freedom of development which prevails, most abundantly in American nature. Our sculptor has not gone far to seek it, and he has found it. His inspiration is American. If he continue faithful to its first revelations we have no fear of his genius perishing for lack of material in the Beautiful, though he never visit the classic shores of Greece and Rome. He is not ignorant, as the details of his works show—the hair, an ear, an eyelid, a hand, a foot—of the secrets of art-representation which the ancients discovered. They imposed laws upon art, or rather they discovered its limitations and its necessary resources; but for the main work, nature is the school and the heart of man—the beauty of form, of grace, of outward refinement; not less the qualities so worthily represented in these marbles, the interior charms of life—the light of the intellect irradiating the earthen vase—the sweet possession of the virtues.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

A publication, in three stately volumes, bearing the renowned names of ROBERTSON and PRESCOTT, is entitled to precedence in our book notices of the week. PHILLIPS, SAMPSON & Co., of Boston, have rendered a new service to the literary world by publishing ROBERTSON'S History of Charles the Fifth, with a continuation, by PRESCOTT, the author of the History of Ferdinand and Isabella, in which all the important facts relating to the cloister life of the Emperor, omitted by the Scotch historian, are supplied by the American author. When ROBERTSON wrote his history, the archives of Simancas, which contain the important particulars relating to his convent life, were inaccessible; but they are now opened to the world, and Mr. PRESCOTT, availing himself of the copious materials which he had gathered from original sources in writing his History of Philip the Second, as well as the researches of SIMIENO and the compilation of MIGNET, has furnished in the continuation of ROBERTSON'S history of the reign of the Emperor, a vivid narrative of the life in retiracy of the great monarch, which renders the life complete, and the character of the man perfect. In ROBERTSON'S history, CHARLES figures as the great Emperor, the stately personage of history, always wearing his imperial robes, and affecting the mien of the ruler and conqueror. But Mr. PRESCOTT gives us a familiar portrait of the man. We are at once put at our ease in his presence, recognise him as a human being, and, without forgetting that he is a monarch in retirement, we feel that he is one of us. ROBERTSON disposes of the cloister life of the Emperor in a few vague sentences; but we no sooner pass from the cold and dignified periods of the elder historian into the familiar and picturesque pages of PRESCOTT, than we find ourselves in a different atmosphere, instinct with life, and surrounded by living realities. We were not before conscious of the amount of local coloring which PRESCOTT throws upon his page until contrasting his narrative style, so closely with that of ROBERTSON. Of course, those who have ROBERTSON'S Charles the Fifth already, will be under the necessity of adding to it Mr. PRESCOTT'S continuation of the Emperor's life after his abdication, to render the history complete.

A candid and philosophical treatise on the subject of spiritualistic table-turning, and the various phenomena connected with it, has long been needed. There are but few persons who have either the opportunities or the ability to make that searching investigation into the recondite science of spiritualism, which is necessary to enable an unprejudiced mind to form a satisfactory opinion respecting it. The spiritualists claim too much, while their opponents have yielded too little. The absurdities and incongruities of the published statements of the developements made by mediums are easily detected and laughed at; but these remarks the conviction on the majority of minds that where there is so much smoke there must be some fire; and precisely what this spark of fire is we think that the Count AGENOR DE GASPARIN has succeeded in discovering, and has very clearly explained in his Tourniquets or Tables, the Supernatural in General, and Spirits. The Rev. Dr. BAIRD volunteers an indorsement of M. DE GASPARIN'S moral character, and his treatise, itself, bears sufficient evidence of his ability in handling his subject. It has been well translated from the French by E. W. REMBER, and published in two handsome volumes, by KERMORE & KERLOON, of this City. M. DE GASPARIN is a Frenchman, but a devout Protestant, of the school of philosophers and a patriot and accomplished scholar, his style is lucid and forcible. He [illegible] through [illegible] arrives at the conclusion that [illegible] in the phenomena of [illegible] thing is not spiritual but [illegible]

A perfect dictionary of the English-American language is not a thing to be anticipated just now, while the exigencies of the day are constantly leading to the coinage of new terms and the new version of old ones from their ordinary meanings. But there may be an approximation towards perfection, and this has certainly been made in a new compilation, abridged from WEBSTER'S great work, by his son, WILLIAM G. WEBSTER, assisted by CHAUNCEY GOODRICH. The new work is not designed for students, but for the practical purposes of business men, and, for this end it appears to have been most admirably arranged and judiciously condensed. It is both an explanatory and pronouncing dictionary, and in addition to the legitimate objects of a lexicon, it contains a good many useful tables, and a collection of French and Latin phrases in common use, and "a concise account of the heathen deities," the lack of which might have given place to better matter. The publishers are MASON & BROTHERS of New-York.

New-Granada—Twenty Months in the Andes, by ISAAC F. HOLTON, A. M., is the title of a new work published by HARPER & BROTHERS, which we shall make an extended notice of hereafter. It is a large and well-illustrated volume, containing much interesting matter in relation to New-Granada.

A very excellent little work in its way is Massey's Exhibition Reciter and Drawing-Room Entertainments, published by S. FRENCH. The selections of dramatic and poetical pieces for recitation are made with discrimination and good judgment.

The oldest of living poetesses on this side the Atlantic, the most widely known and the best esteemed, Mrs. SIGOURNEY, has published a volume expressly for the consolation and refreshment of the great multitude who, like herself, have passed the meridian of human life, and may be now classed as the P. M.'s of the human family. It is expressly and solely for those that the book has been written, and she says in her preface, "Whoever is found reading it may be suspected to have attained the same ripe age." But, notwithstanding this admonitory caution, we imagine that Post Meridian will find as many readers among the A. M.'s, as among the P. M.'s. Among the didactic reflections of Mrs. SIGOURNEY will be found many pleasant and gossipy sketches of cotemporary P. M.'s whose lives and characters offer fit subjects of illustration for her theme. The volume comes to us from F. A. BROWN, a Hartford publisher, through WILEY & HALSTED.

NOVELS.

We place this word at the head of this paragraph, not because we have any new books that properly come under that head, but because we have not. The fact is worth noting. A whole week passes without a new novel being placed upon our table! Whatever the fact may portend, we are very certain it cannot be any suspension of the business of novel-publishing. But if we have no novels proper, we have three very pretty novelettes, or books which may be ranked in that class. Messrs. DIX, EDWARDS & Co. have published Tales of Flemish Life, by HENDRIK CONSCIENCE, containing four charming little stories illustrative of Flemish society and manners. The same publishers have issued a copyright edition of The Pyrenees on a Visit to the Paris Universal Exhibition, by the author of Lorenzo Benoni, and illustrated with drawings by Punch's great artist, JOHN LEECH. GEORGE FOWLER MORRISON gives us an adaptation of MARMONTEL'S Belisarius to the needs of the present day. Mr. MORRISON is a remarkable author—not that there is anything especially remarkable in his Belisarius, but, judging from a declaration in his preface, he is the most remarkable author of his day. Mr. MORRISON declares that "Money, as the price of my labor and sincerity, would sully me." He ingenuously adds: "I have written and translated for the sake of my great country. Enthusiasm has been my spur, sublimity the material, and usefulness the goal of Belisaire!" Happy MORRISON! How few of those who learn "what meagre profits flow from pen and ink" are animated by such ennobling motives.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

"About these days look out for an inundation of children's books," may be found in the literary almanac, by those who consult its pages, if there be any such work in existence. We have a small shower of works for children, as a premonitory sprinkling of the coming inundation. We do not object to them; they are like spring rains to tender plants, and herbage. Happily for the rising generation, the books now designed for their amusement and instruction, are very different from those which were put into the hands of their fathers and grandfathers. PHILLIPS, SAMPSON & Co., of Boston, have done their part towards enriching the department of children's books this year extremely well. Kobaltoon, is a new book written and illustrated by CHRISTOPHER PEARSE CRANCH, as a sequel to the Last of the Huggermuggers, published last season. The illustrations of both of these books are very well engraved and well printed, but their grotesqueness is rather too much in the German manner; their extravagances seem rather forced than humorous. A much better but less pretending book is Red Beard's Stories for Children; Translated from the German by Cousin Fannie. The silhouette illustrations of this volume are exceedingly good, humorous and striking, without being grotesque. We have always been of the opinion that the most acceptable pictures for children are those that make the nearest approach to simple truth. The Fairy Spectacle, Worth and Wealth, and Bright Pictures from Home Life, are three pretty story books from the same publishers.

A strange phenomenon makes its appearance on our table, in the shape of a capital little story-book for the holidays from the pen of our overworked District-Attorney, A. OAKEY HALL, Esq. Few lawyers venture into such regions, and fewer still feel at home when they get there. Old Whitey's Christmas Trot is the name he gives it. The story is entirely metropolitan. We are introduced to a Wall-street lawyer and his lean attorney who are persecuting a country clergyman with a beautiful daughter and a famous horse. There is also an honest omnibus driver with a model wife and a model policeman for a brother—an elder son is in the legal way, and a younger professes to be a literateur. A little world of romance surrounds the taking of the famous horse on an execution issued against the rector by the Wall-street people. In the end the lawyer grows penitent and discovers a long-lost nephew in his office lad, who finds a cousin in the rector's daughter. There is, of course, a marriage, and the lovers and all the characters, including the horse, go down to immortality in HARPER'S best type with TEWKSBURY'S best illustrations. Humor and pathos, points dramatic and descriptive, alternate throughout the book, and, doubtless, from the author's public experience, all the characters are taken from life.

LOCKWOOD & Co. have published a very beautifully illustrated edition of Little Red Riding Hood, as one of their series of Illuminated Household Stories for Little Folks.

APPLETON & Co. have published a trio of nice story books, with an infusion of religious sentiment, entitled Dorothy Fern, a Juvenile Story of Life in England, by MARY E. BRADDON; Sedgemoor, or Home Lessons, by Mrs. MARSHAL, and [illegible] Pendennis, but a decided [illegible] of the author's philosophy and [illegible] for, his style is lucid and forcible. NEW-YORK CITY.

THE ACADEMY OF MEDICINE—SPECIAL MEETINGS.

Stephen Power, Esq., Surveyor, of New-Orleans, was the Guest—Reasons the City Authorities for Such Extension—Opinion of Dr. Francis Wood, Jun.—Proposition to Put the City Inspectorship Department into the Hands of Medical Men.

A special meeting of the New-York Academy of Medicine was held at the University on Wednesday evening last. Dr. WILLARD PARKER, President, in the Chair, who stated that the Academy had been called together for the purpose of availing themselves of the opportunity to hear the views of Dr. BARROW, of New-Orleans, upon the subject of Yellow Fever. Dr. B. was well known to many as formerly connected with the school attached to the University, and as having in New-Orleans, in the Mexican war with Gen. SCOTT, had a large field for the observation and study of Yellow Fever, upon which he had read and written much. He was happy to introduce him to the Academy.

Dr. BARROW briefly returned his thanks to the Academy for the honor of appearing before them, and stated that a few years since he was appointed by the City of New-Orleans the Chairman of a Medical Commission to examine and report upon the subject of Yellow Fever, in its relations to the City of New York. That report was elaborate and voluminous, but as it he need not refer, for it had been published, and probably was in the hands of most of those present, and on the present occasion he should limit himself to the cause and propagation of the disease, without touching at all upon the treatment and many other points. How it originates, and how to prevent its recurrence, would be the subject of his evening's paper.

CAUSE OF YELLOW FEVER.

There are two conditions necessary to the creation of Yellow Fever. An elevated temperature and a high dew-point form the blades of the "shears of fate" called by miasm and filth. The report of the Sanitary Commission had stated this fact, and that whenever the dew-point fell to 60° the fever ceased invariably. The experience of the subsequent years had corroborated this view, both in New-Orleans, Savannah, Charleston, &c.

The paper which he should read to the Academy was prepared for New-Orleans, but it contained some statements, intended for this Academy, in opposition to the views expressed here within the last year.

First—He should make some corrections where he had been misrepresented. He had never said that the presence of the soil alone would produce the Yellow Fever.

Second—He had never stated that a high dew-point was the cause of Yellow Fever; but that it was the conjunction of these two elements with filth in certain proportions that was the cause. The three elements were necessary.

In regard to the report of the Commission which had generally been well received by the profession, there was skepticism on two points, the influence of a high dew-point and the necessity of a specific cause, and these points he proceeded to explain. Here he took notice of statements made a year since to the Academy by Dr. STORER, of New-Orleans, whose high position rendered it necessary that these views should be met.

The condition of the atmosphere was very important. He had frequently known unacclimated persons visiting an infected district to be attacked in two hours, when the dew-point was high.

I predicted the Yellow Fever of 1853 in May. The Spring was dry, the rainy season being but seven days and seven nights, but in June and August there was much rain; for thirty days and nights it rained, and the dew point averaged 76 @ 78-100. Yellow Fever depends upon meteorological changes, and as the dew-point rises and falls this disease varies. A few cases may occur sporadically, but there never will be an epidemic.

Dr. S. said that this disease had no relation with intermittents, and that it was no more likely to attack localities where rheumatic diseases prevailed. It is charity to suppose that the author has been misreported in this particular, the fact being so directly opposed to this view.

He wished to correct one very prevalent idea, that dew-point and dryness are not synonymous. A hydrometer is the only test of this atmospheric condition. Rapid rains deplete the air and leave it dryer than before. Sandy soils absorb it, while clayey ones retain it, and the air is, consequently, correspondingly more or less dry. It is well known that foggy weather is generally without rain, yet no one would pretend that the air was not laden with moisture. Humidity is a necessary constituent in many diseases, as Cholera, Cholera Infantum, Sun-Strokes, &c.

Whenever yellow fever occurs in any place for the first time, it is always accompanied by marked atmospheric changes; the same changes are noted at its departure, and these show how futile are the terms indigenous, imported and the like. A few cases may occur after a frost, but there is no epidemic. So we see cholera occurring in cold weather, and even in Russia where the thermometer is near zero, but it is forgotten that this is the out-door temperature. The in-door temperature, where the disease actually occurs, is about 80, or Summer heat. The seasons when yellow fever is rife in New-Orleans, are peculiarly damp. The city is always damp. Goods spoil kept in our stores one year, and flour frequently in a few hours, for notwithstanding the peculiar dampness of our city, little or no efforts have been made in the construction of our warehouses to counteract it. The cause of yellow fever, he hoped it be remembered, will not cause yellow fever, if the other elements of high temperature and filth be not added.

(The Doctor then went on to speak of the manner in which this disease attacks a neighborhood, and particularly in the case of Ben Franklin, which, it is alleged, carried the yellow fever to Norfolk, but which he said was not the case.)

It is the fault of the city authorities if yellow fever invades a city! The disease is entirely in their hands, and they may have it or not, as they wish. The "shears of fate" which is to cut the thread of their lives is formed, as I have said, of two blades. The one is high temperature, the other a high dew-point. But the rivet of these shears, without which they cannot act, is filth. The authorities can so drain the City and so thoroughly cleanse it that one blade will be dulled, and the rivet may entirely be wanting.

"Millions for sure, but not a cent for prevention," seems to be the motto of city authorities. Filth is the electric spark which fires the other elements. Typhus, small-pox, yellow fever, measles, and many other diseases, as well as all intermittents, may be, in my opinion, generated, without foreign importation. A study of meteorology was absolutely necessary for the safety of a city. Notwithstanding the proximity of Government institutions to the infected region around Norfolk, no such observations were made, and in some places where this was supposed to be done they were made at a distance of a mile from the location where the disease raged, upon a hill, or in a healthy locality. Thermometers, therefore, were not the reports of the infected locality, but of a proximate healthy one, and a comparison would show a most marked difference.

On concluding his remarks, of which we have scarcely given an outline, to one of the largest meetings of the Society ever convened, Dr. A. H. STEVENS proposed a vote of thanks, which was unanimously carried, and then proceeded to propound several questions for the nine new members of the Academy, (upon which it was thought inexpedient for the Academy to express a formal opinion,) but being called upon for his own personal views, stated: First—That he did not think yellow fever was a high grade of the bilious fever of our country, but something more. Second—He did not consider it personally communicable. Third—He did think its origin connected with the arrival of foreign shipping. Fourth—He held his opinion in suspense, whether it might not exist independent of the arrival of foreign vessels.

Dr. GRAHAM hoped, if the vote was taken, it might equally include all the discussion of the subject.

Dr. ISAAC WOOD thought it unwise to vote on this question, as he doubted if the members of the Academy generally were able to vote understandingly.

Dr. GRAHAM desired further light upon it before voting, and would, therefore, request Prof. DAVID R. KING, of Edinburg, Scotland, whom he saw present, (the distinguished chemist, well known for his scientific sanitary reports, made to the British Government, who arranged the ventilating apparatus of the new Houses of Parliament, &c.,) to state to the Academy his views respecting the influence of dampness in producing disease.

Prof. KING, in responding, said he had seen little of the relation of dampness to Yellow Fever, but he had, in Scotland, England, France, Russia, &c., noted many relations between moisture and disease generally. He had never, in his life, listened with so great interest and delight to any paper as to the concluding one of this evening. He had had much to do with ventilating old buildings in London, in draining sunken places, where the drains and sin-traps had to be carried down through the remains of the old Roman walls, ships from China, the Houses of Parliament, and especially the worst part of London, the Old Bailey. Lime in large quantities he had found to entirely destroy all disagreeable odors. He was not prepared to hear of the low temperature of New-Orleans. He had thought, when a boy, cold as London immediately after a warm day, to be cold, was invariably accompanied by a fog. He had, in his time, to be exposed in Glasgow, Edinburgh, and the Highlands of Scotland, to be drenched with moisture, and yet never had a cold. In his late residence in London, where, during winter, moisture would keep pace for several days, when, perhaps, the greatest, two or three hours only sunshine was necessary to essentially change it.

Dr. STEVENS had observed, when the Potter's Field was in Third-avenue, there was an intense stench from some, at certain times, which had not a stench in two weeks, and yet, as the President of the Board of Health, inform us, thousands of lime were there; it only were used, making dry place, as the keeper said, "perfectly sweet—as sweet as a rose!" He wished to know whether the lime decomposed the mass or withdrew the moisture?

Prof. K. replied that it did both, and in various ways, when in the fluid state; so long as the alkali was in excess, as evinced by the test paper, it would be effective.

Dr. FORMAN proposed some resolutions expressing the opinion of the Academy respecting the importance of attention to the cleanliness, draining, &c., of the City.

Dr. PARKER seconded them, urging the necessity and importance of the principles therein stated.

Dr. GRISCOM hoped they might be carefully and strongly stated, and drew the attention of the large assembly present to a preamble and resolutions then lying on the table for signatures. It was a memorial directed by the Academy, to be drawn up and forwarded to the Legislature, requesting that the City Inspector's department be abolished and a department of Public Health be established, and that the Superintendent should be a regular graduated medical man. This was largely signed during the evening.

The resolutions were referred to a Committee to prepare for the action of the Academy at the next meeting. The Academy then adjourned.

☞ Dr. BARROW, of New-Orleans, on Wednesday evening, before the Academy of Medicine, said in substance that the local authorities generally are responsible for an epidemic yellow fever. Thirty-five per cent. of the English Crimean army died chiefly through want of sanitary precautions. In view of such opinions from such authoritative quarters, and such startling facts, is it not time for citizens to give some little attention to the impotent system that promises to (but never does) clean our streets, and maintains at an enormous expense such abundant filth in all our public places? The yellow fever crept up to the outskirts of the City last Summer. It had been creeping Northward slowly for several Summers, and our best sanitarians fully believe that had not the weather been unusually healthful we should have felt the plague in its full force within our own borders before now. If such another Summer as that of 1855 should return upon us next year, and our metropolis as full of filth and reeking with the manure of stenches as then, there is no earthly hope for us but that grass will grow in our streets, and our warehouses be still, and our thoroughfares deserted. Our sanitary regulations are nothing—our health police utterly ineffectual, worse than nothing. Isn't it time for citizens to give the subject a serious thought?

Foreign Influence.

A LECTURE BY JOHN MITCHEL.

Mr. JOHN MITCHEL delivered a lecture in the Tabernacle to a large, and certainly one of the most enthusiastic audiences that has gathered in that building since the close of the Presidential campaign. The time named for commencing the lecture was 8 o'clock, and at that hour Mr. MITCHEL entered the building and while proceeding down the aisle to the platform, was welcomed by a running fire of genuine Irish cheers. Soon after reaching the desk, he commenced by saying that the subject of his lecture was "Foreign Influence." His audience were not to suppose that he was going to rail against giving citizenship to foreigners; against the Pope because he is an Italian, nor against the Saviour because he was born in Nazareth, and not in America. He left such railing to the old ladies who superintend Know-Nothing newspapers, and he would refer his hearers to those prints for such matter—if any such papers were now in existence. It was not such influences that he feared. But there was an influence which he would call their attention to, and, while doing so, would refer to the only portion of the sayings of GEORGE WASHINGTON now often quoted—that which warned his countrymen to beware of foreign influence. From that he drew the inference that with WASHINGTON the citizen by choice and the citizen by chance were equal; and also that the influence against which he warned his countrymen was the influence of the British Government. And WASHINGTON was right, notwithstanding his warning had not been heeded. That it had not been was evident in the fact that England held sway over our commerce; in the fact that an editor, when it was feared that after the Crimean war, England would turn her guns upon New-York, said with truth, that she would not do that, as to do so would be simply to destroy her own property; and in the fact stated boastingly by EMERSON, in his English Traits, that our libraries were filled with English books; and that in effect England was our teacher. But it was not enough that they were our teachers. Fearing their power might not be sustained sufficiently by that, they proceeded to interfere with our politics. They did so during the recent Presidential campaign. All knew how strenuously the English Government advocated the claims of JOHN C. FRÉMONT for the Presidency. Abolitionism, which sought to destroy the Union, was fostered and sustained by England in the North, and the curse of Know-Nothingism was sustained, so far as it was sustained, by England. It was by men in the British interest that riots against foreign-born citizens had been instigated here; and by the same men were the mobs gathered that desecrated and destroyed Catholic Churches. [Cheers.] That Slavery was either morally, politically or religiously wrong, was not dreamed of here, until British philanthropy taught it to Massachusetts. [Applause.] Was this not British influence? Were not such men as GARRISON, THEODORE PARKER and RALPH WALDO EMERSON under British influence? And were not such women as HARRIET BEECHER STOWE under British influence? Why, Mr. EMERSON, who was a writer of pretty sentences, and who, if he could but string them together intelligibly, would succeed in being understandable, boasts of it; and feeling it, extolled all Englishmen, and all Englishmen did. In proof of this he quoted from EMERSON's Traits portions to sustain his assertions. EMERSON himself was English, from head to foot. All he thought, all he believed, all he lived for, all he hoped for, was English, and only English. But he would pass from a consideration of Mr. EMERSON and his book. He had not spent so much time over them because he set a high value upon them, but simply because he considered English Traits a fair specimen of New-England Abolition literature. In addition to the influences he had named, he mentioned that of the London Times, every article in which on American politics was copied into every prominent American newspaper, and had, in consequence, a larger circulation here than any single American newspaper. All these influences, and many more from the same source, were in opposition to the best interests of the country. Among the citizens of the United States, none had more cause to repel such influence, than the Irish born; and, that being so, he was gratified by knowing that Irishmen were the conservative element in the United States; and that they had stood united in support of the staunch democracy; that they had elected JAMES BUCHANAN; and that, in doing so, Irishmen had crushed foreign influence in the United States,—leaving it a fact that the men who supported successfully the liberties handed down by our forefathers, were the men who submitted their private judgment to the correction of priests, provided for us by the Pope of Rome. He concluded with quoting WASHINGTON's warning against the insidious wiles of Foreign influence.

Mr. Milburn's Lecture.

Rev. WM. H. MILBURN, who is favorably known as a lecturer, appears before the New-York Young Men's Christian Association again on Monday night, and will discourse upon the "Life and Character of ALEXANDER HAMILTON." His lecture a week or two since, upon AARON BURR, was filled with new and interesting facts, and this lecture upon HAMILTON will be an appropriate sequel. Such lectures cannot fail to be instructive and entertaining.

Death of Hermann E. Ludewig.

Mr. HERMANN E. LUDEWIG, a well-known German lawyer of this City, died yesterday morning at his residence in Brooklyn, after a short illness, aged 47. Mr. L. came to this country about fifteen years ago, intending merely a temporary visit. Some letters, however, which he wrote home to Dresden, and which were published, in which he drew a contrast between the state of Europe and America, strongly favorable to the latter, excited the ill-will of the Saxon Government, and he was in consequence advised by his friends to remain in this country, and accordingly did, settling in New-York. Having previously prepared himself for the legal profession in Germany, he embarked in it here, soon acquiring a large connection among our German population. He was one of the most active members of the American Ethnological Society, and was also connected with the National Institute and New-York Historical Society. He was the author of a very valuable bibliographical work, the only one of its kind, entitled Literature of American Local History, New-York, 1846. A new production, a bibliographical list of Grammars, Dictionaries, &c., of the languages o the American Continent, is now in the press of Trubner, in London.

Mr. LUDEWIG leaves a widow, but no children.

Fire in Wall-street.

A fire broke out at 6¾ o'clock this morning, in the confectionery and French restaurant of B. D. GAVSON, No. 19 Wall-street. Mr. GAVSON sustained a loss of about $1,500. He was insured for $3,000, in the Mechanics' Insurance Company, on his stock of liquors, and a part of the furniture; but nearly $600 worth of furniture and fixtures was destroyed, upon which there was no insurance. So that he sustains an actual loss of $600. Frank Mr. GAVSON's place the fire extended to the oyster saloon of D. & R. H. LEMY, in the basement, damaging them about $300, but the premises were covered by an insurance of $800, in the Atlantic Insurance Company. The second and third floors, occupied by unoccupied, were damaged considerably by water. The damage to the entire building was said. It is covered by insurance. The fire originated underneath the furnace of the [illegible] attached to Mr. GAVSON's restaurant.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT CALENDAR—THIS DAY.

Motions and decisions.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT—Dec. 12.

Before Hon. Judge Ingersoll.

Sebastian D. Lawrence et al. vs. The Steamship [illegible] Libel to the use was filed by the owners of the schooner Sidney Mace, to recover the value of the schooner and her cargo, amounting to about $6,000, she having been sunk by a collision with the Steamer on the night of the 5th of April, 1854, off the coast of New-Jersey, nearly opposite Little Egg Harbor. The libelants allege that the schooner was bound to New-York with a cargo of coal and marble, heading north-east on her larboard tack, with the wind from north-west by North, the night being starlight; that the lights of the steamer were seen approaching, whereupon a light was swung on the schooner to attract her attention, and the steamer seemed to be passing to windward, when of a sudden she changed her course, and came into the schooner at full speed, nearly amidship, sinking her in a few minutes; that the schooner never changed her course and committed no fault.

The answer alleges that the steamer was bound on her regular trip from New-York to Norfolk, with good lights set, a lookout kept, and under moderate speed. That when the schooner's light was seen, the steamer bore away to avoid her, but as the light did not change its direction, she bore away again, and still the bearing of the light was unchanged; that the light then disappeared, and in a few minutes the schooner was seen heading a course which would have cleared the steamer, but she suddenly then altered her course several points and came right across the steamer's bows, and thus caused the collision.

Testimony on both sides was taken.

For libelants—Messrs. Beebe, Dean and Donohue.
For claimants—Mr. Van Winkle.

THE BRICK CHURCH CASE.

Motion to amend Complaint Abandoned.

ARGUMENT ON DEFENDANTS' DEMURRER.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Hon. Judge Roosevelt.

FRIDAY, Dec. 12.

Arkenburgh and Earle vs. The Mayor, &c., of the City of New-York.—The counsel for the plaintiffs in the above suit appeared in Court this morning, pursuant to the conditions of the adjournment on Wednesday last, and announced their readiness to proceed with the motion for leave to amend the complaint. Another case being before the Court and unfinished, the Court, in accordance with the rule in such circumstances, decided to hear that out before allowing the Brick Church case to be resumed, or renewed, rather, on the motion to amend.

The counsel in the other case accordingly proceeded with it, but one of them being obliged shortly afterward to attend the U. S. Circuit Court, he applied for permission from the Judge to absent himself for that purpose.

His Honor suggested that as the Counsel in the Brick Church were in waiting, the intervening case should be postponed for the day. This was agreed to, and the Brick Church case now came up for a hearing.

Mr. Waldo Hutchins, for the complainants, read the order granted by Justice Clerke yesterday morning on the papers that had been read to the Court, and read an affidavit signed by himself, asserting the reading by him to the Court at the argument on the 31st day of May last, of the amended complaint; that it was taken by the Judge along with the other papers in the case, that it had indorsed on it a statement of its having been filed on the 14th day of July last, in the Clerk's office, whose certificate it bore, and that it was sworn to before W. H. Dunnburry, a commissioner of deeds, on the 31st day of May, 1856.

Mr. O'Conor, in reply, read the affidavits of Wm. Fullerton and B. F. Dunning, the former of whom had been in part and the latter entirely a witness to the proceedings in the Court on the 31st May, whilst Mr. Field was arguing the case in opposition to Mr. O'Conor, and both deponents denied any knowledge whatever of an amended complaint, or of any amending of the complaint, or of having assented to any amending or amendment of the complaint on the occasion specified. To Mr. Dunning's affidavit were annexed the notes which he had taken of Mr. Field's argument at the time, and one of the points of which went to show that Mr. Field had attempted to answer the argument as to the deficiency of his complaint. The statement of the opposing argument by Mr. Field was entered in the deponent's notes in the following terms: "That the complaint sufficiently avers that the plaintiffs are tax-payers."

Mr. O'Conor also produced certified copies of the order entered on the 6th of June, denying the application for the injunction. In reply to a question of the Judge he stated that what was called the amended complaint had never been served upon him or anybody—notwithstanding the fact that his demurrer which recognised only the complaint as it stood and bore no reference whatever to any amendment of the complaint, had been served on the plaintiffs' counsel on the 18th of July.

Mr. Hutchins and Mr. Field both said they had never read the demurrer, not supposing there could be any doubt as to the fact of the amendment having been made, and both contended that it was not necessary to give notice of the amendment, supposing it to be made in open Court,—and that they had a right to amend once as a matter of right without prejudice to the proceedings.

The Court allowed that they had a right to amend, but they had not a right to use their amendment on that motion without giving the other side an opportunity to answer; and they could not call for an answer to any form of an amendment until they had served it.

After a very prolonged discussion between counsel as to the facts in dispute,

The Court interfered, and observed that the defendants had a right on their part, and they insisted on it, to have this case go over, and to have that amended complaint served, and demur or answer as they might see fit. Under the misapprehension, however, which had manifestly existed in this case in regard to the amendment, he (the Judge) did not think that any cost should be allowed.

Mr. Field—Rather than that should be done, we will argue the case as it now stands. Even if the defendants' counsel should succeed in turning A and B out of Court, there are 28,000 tax-payers in the City, and each can bring a suit in this Court.

The Judge—You are now addressing the other counsel, and he is not in a position to agree with you.

Mr. O'Conor—Yes, Sir; I agree with him completely.

Mr. Field—So that there are 27,999 suits in abeyance. If the learned gentleman will not agree that we may argue this question on its merits, then we will argue it as it stands.

Mr. O'Conor would not agree to anything. He wanted to know what decision His Honor would make as the other motion, viz.: the motion to correct his paper book. In reply to an observation of the Judge, he observed that he did not care what order His Honor made, so that it was his, (the Judge's,) and not that of the counsel.

The Court then ordered that the motion to amend the Demur book be denied, without prejudice to any future rights of the parties.

Mr. O'Conor then proceeded to argue the case on the defendants' demurrer. He read the allegations in the complaint, and stated that his first objection was this, that the plaintiffs had not shown that they were tax-payers. The complaint contained no averment of that kind, and, if it could be assumed that it did, yet the Court could not certainly suppose that they were tax-payers to a greater amount than one cent apiece. And there was this other difficulty, that there was nothing in law to determine what a tax-payer is, for a man's agent might sometimes pay his taxes for him. This case was different from the Christopher case, because in that case the complaint was that if the corporation expended the money in the way that they proposed to do, they would have authority, under a certain act of the Legislature, to impose a tax to that extent on the person who owned the property in the City of New-York. How did the tax-payer show his interest here? So far as any past taxes were concerned, they were imposed upon him already. He could not evade paying them by reason of anything the corporation could do. As to any future tax, it did not appear that he owned any property that could be taxed; it did not appear that he even intended to live here. How then was he to be affected by this? Why, he said that if the corporation parted with this property without getting as much for it as they might possibly have, it was to be supposed that when they came to levy taxes the taxation would be higher than if they still retained it! Now, as to the next point. The equity set up was, that the corporation had a sort of interest under the conditions of the grant to the church, which might be sold, or in some way made available. In the first place, this was a condition subsequent, the enforcement of which leads to the forfeiture of an estate. Was there any instance of a bill in equity to aid and support a proceeding to bring about a forfeiture of an estate? In the next place it was suggested, that an interest of this description should be sold at public auction. That could not be because it was incapable of being sold to anybody. It could only be released, or granted if they pleased, to the owner of the estate—the person in possession. This outstanding right to reënter for a breach of condition subsequent was not a kind of claim that was merchantable. It could not be sold.

The Court inquired if there was a rent payable to the corporation.

Mr. O'Conor replied that there was a rent to pay, and his Honor would find by the act of 1845, and the ordinance under it, which was part of the public law, that the commissioners of the sinking fund had a right, on receiving a sum equal to the capital which would produce six per cent, to surrender it. Here the commissioners of the sinking fund had resorted to a means whereby they had secured to the city some $70,000 instead of about $16,000, the sum at which they were authorized to commute.

The Court said that as to the assignability of the condition, the suggestion had been made that it had gone with the reversion.

Mr. O'Conor stated that the point had been made that it was not assignable by the policy of the law, and for the great vexation and disturbance to the rights of possession; at the same time it was very desirable, and proper, that the fee farm rent should be so assignable. The interests were certainly so distinct that a grant of one would not be a grant of the other. Now, would not a fee farm rent be assignable? Was it not evident that it stands alone—even though there was another condition—another incorporeal hereditament—a right to reënter for condition broken reserved to the grantors—would not a party have a right to sell his fee farm rent? He (counsel) supposed he naturally would. Would the inability of this right to reënter for a breach of condition prevent the alienation of the other, which was altogether proper to be alienated? Most certainly not. So on the other hand, why should the right of alienation have the effect of alienating a thing which the policy of the law pronounced not to be alienable? As to the fee farm rent, the act of 1845 and the ordinance showed the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund had a right to commute it for a very small sum; and in entering into an operation to commute or extinguish it, that was all they appear to have had a right to do or could do. The learned counsel then cited the authorities adduced by him on a former occasion in regard to the character of that condition. Such conditions, he contended, were disfavored, and had to be strictly construed. There was no remedy for any breach of them but a strict action at law to recover the thing granted. He referred to the first section of the Sinking Fund act to sustain the proposition that the Commissioners of that fund had a right to sell it, that they were bound to sell it at public auction, and did sell it at public auction. He regretted that that ordinance should be largely and liberally construed because it was for the benefit of the public credit. The great point on which this bill seemed to have been attempted to be sustained formerly was based on the idea that this thing was not property at all; that it was no kind of estate, neither real nor personal. And that seemed to be the fact. It was not an estate. It was only the mere possibility—the chance of coming into an estate. It would even seem as if the argument was founded on the very insignificance of the thing itself in law. The argument was that it was impracticable to sell it. It was pretty clear, indeed, that it could not be sold by any other contrivance than the one resorted to. The object of the injunction that was applied for was to prevent the execution to the purchasers of a conveyance. Now, if such a conveyance would be executed, and anything be done which would amount to a breach of the condition, the conveyance would be utterly void, and that would be all the better for the City, because the City could then bring its action and recover the whole premises. It was proper to notice here that no fraud or bad faith on the part of the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, or of the Corporation, or any of the defendants was asserted. In conclusion he submitted that there was no ground for maintaining this bill of equity nor for getting an injunction.

Mr. Hutchins contended that, in the first place, there were rights of property involved in this matter; and, in the second place, that there was a question of principle to be settled by the Court of the most momentous consequence to the City in its future history and prosperity, as connected with City property. The first point before the Court was, whether the City had any rights in that property which could be disposed of at any time; and, second, if that were so, what were those rights? Now, they (complainants) thought that the City had rights here, and they thought that His Honor fell into a great error on the former argument, upon which he had dissolved the injunction, in holding that the interest of the City in this property was an interest in real estate. With the Court of Appeals, they thought it was not real estate. They agreed with the learned counsel on the other side that it was not real estate; that it was not any estate known to the law; but that, on the contrary, it was a chose in action; a right of entrance; a mere right. (Court of Errors—DePeyster vs. Nicholas, 2d Selden, 506.) He thought that, on a reëxamination of the subject in view of this decision, his Honor would not hold to the position taken on his former opinion. The learned counsel (Mr. O'Conor) had said that admitting this was not an estate in the law but a mere right of action, it was not an assignable thing—it could not be sold, and therefore there was no necessity of selling it at auction or any other way; it was only a release of the thing which the constituted authorities had a right to give. That this was an assignable thing and was the subject of sale he (Mr. H.) thought was as clear as that it was not real estate. (Revised Statutes, 4th ed. p. 150.)

The Court—That is the same Statute which the opinion recites.

Mr. Hutchins assented, and remarked that, as His Honor had observed to the learned counsel, there being rent reserved here, and his having a right to assign that, did not the assignment of the right to collect the rent carry with it the right to reënter in the case of the forfeiture of the condition? The learned counsel said, "no such thing." But that such was the law was decided in the case of Nicholls vs. New-York and Erie Railroad Company, 2d Kernan, 181. Here there was an ordinance authorizing the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund to sell real estate without any authority from the Common Council at all; and yet they were found going to the Common Council for an ordinance to authorize them to sell it. If this was real estate, why did they go to the Common Council to obtain a release to sell it? They did go to the City, and obtained this release by a resolution which passed one Board one year and the other Board in a subsequent year. So far as this demurrer extended, it was admitted that they had attempted to sell this property without any authority from the Common Council to sell it. Now, how could they do that? In no other way than by bringing it under the seventh section of the Sinking Fund ordinance, which allowed them to sell real estate not reserved for public uses, and which might be sold by them at public auction. But they (defendants) had admitted by their demurrer, that there had been no resolution of the Common Council passed authorizing the release of the interest of the City in this property. It seemed to him that they had now arrived at that point where the Superior Court held that this was not real estate, and that therefore the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund had not authority to sell it at auction; that if it was sold at auction at all, it must have been by an ordinance of the Common Council legally passed, authorizing that sale. The averment in the complaint was that there was no ordinance authorizing that sale; and the defendants admitted it. That was where the case now stood to be adjudicated on by his Honor.

Next came the question whether there was a sale here at public auction; for in either event there must be such a sale. They (plaintiffs) contended that there had been no sale, at public auction, of the interest of the City. There had been a sale, at public auction, of the entire property. That had been sold for $270,000; and the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund had, by an arbitrary arrangement made between themselves and the parties, taken, or were about to take, what they considered the interest of the City to be worth, viz: One-fourth of the produce of the sale. Now the plaintiffs claimed that there was not a sale of the interest of the City at public auction; this was merely a way of fixing the price of the whole property and then afterwards selling, at private sale, the interest of the City at one-fourth of that price. The learned counsel (Mr. O'Conor) said the interest of the City could not be sold in any other way. Why not? What was the interest of the City? The interest of the City was in those rents with the right to reënter in case of the forfeiture of the condition subsequent. Could not that be sold, whether real estate or a chose in action? It was property belonging to the City, which could be sold. To show how far this doctrine, on which were based claims of the right of the Commissioners to make such a sale, might be carried, and what mischievous results might spring out of it, he would suppose a case. Suppose the Battery, not employed for public purposes, were leased for ten years at a rent of $20,000 a year, and that it became desirable for the lessee at the end of a few months to use it for some other purpose—some public purpose—for which a very high price could be obtained. He goes to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund and says: "Here, I have leased this property at $20,000 a year, and want to dispose of it at a very high price, which will benefit both me and the City. Now you may go on and sell it at auction or I will, and I will pay you for the interest of the City one-twentieth part of what it produces," the interest of the City being the absolute fee of the property, the right to take it after the ten years expired. If the Commissioners had the right to make such an arrangement in the Brick Church case, they certainly would have the right to do this in regard to the Battery, or in any other case. This question must be settled, viz.: whether the interest of the City in real property or public property, which the law required to be sold at public auction, could be sold as this Brick Church property had been sold! And the decision of this case would be binding at future times in every other similar case that might come before his Honor, and this case might come up in argument, and make the Court uphold its decision, which was unfair and unjust in every respect. If this was such an interest that it could not be sold at auction, he would ask the learned counsel where did they get any authority to sell it at all? Why, the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund had no more right to sell it than the Commissioner of Repairs and Supplies, unless there was a law in regard to it. And, therefore, as it must be sold at public auction, it was the duty of these parties to wait till legislative action could be obtained, providing that it might be disposed of at private sale.

The Court here observed that in giving a judgment on the argument on the motion for an injunction, it found an ambiguous right—a right to enter for a condition broken. Then they found this rent. Now the right to reënter for a condition broken, was certainly not one that was susceptible of being estimated with mathematical accuracy.

Mr. Hutchins thought his Honor confounded the fixing of the price with the fixing of the interest. But how could that be determined? It had been sold at auction. That was true. But the interest of the City—that is, the price it was worth—had never been fixed at auction.

Mr. O'Conor stated that the point had been made that the property was not in the market now. It was called a public square, and was used for public purposes. The Commissioners of the Sinking Fund had, under the Sinking Fund ordinance, authority to execute this release for a forfeiture of a breach of condition subsequent. Another was whether the Common Council had passed any ordinance authorizing such release. And thirdly, and above all, was the question whether, under any authority of either of them, a sale could be made unless there was a sale by auction of the interest of the City. He understood His Honor to have decided that the Sinking Fund ordinance was sufficient to authorize the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund to execute this release; that there need not be a sale by auction nor a resolutions of the Common Council. Now, upon argument, since in the suit of the people brought by the Attorney-General against the same defendants in the Superior Court, the Court there, after hearing an argument which occupied three evenings, ordered a reargument; and the point on which the reargument was ordered was what determined what they had already decided. He had written to the Judges (Hoffman and Duer) who presided in order to make sure of the fact, and had obtained an answer from Judge Duer, Judge Hoffman being ill, (which answer with his note he read,) stating that the only question that they had desired to be reargued was, whether the ordinance of the Common Council authorizing the Commissioners to sell the property, was regularly passed, or, in other words, was valid.

Now, that put the whole question on the validity of the ordinance which was passed by the Common Council, by one Board in one year, and by the other Board a year afterwards. Now, upon the validity of that ordinance he, (Judge Roosevelt,) at Special Term, and he and Judge Strong at General Term, had decided upon solemn argument that an ordinance so passed was void.

Mr. Field then addressed himself to the points made on Mr. O'Conor's argument for the defendants, to which he replied at considerable length, and closed by submitting a series of points for the plaintiff, the substance of which, so far as they are material, has already been given.

Mr. O'Conor then rose to close for the defendants. He hoped some respect would be paid, and the utmost force given to the argument of his learned friend on the point of stare decisis. The defendants had demurred in this case because the opinion given by his Honor on the motion for an injunction applied to the case made on the plaintiffs' bill, without any reference to anything contained in the affidavits, either for the plaintiffs or defendants. And if that opinion were well founded, this demurrer must be allowed. Now, as to the stare decisis, if his Honor resolved to follow that principle, the decision upon this demurrer should be conformable to his decision upon the motion for an injunction, and consequently be against the plaintiffs' case upon its general merits.

Again His Honor's attention, under the same general head, was invited to a supposed decision in the Superior Court, that this conveyance by the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund would not be valid without an ordinance of some kind by the Common Council duly passed. Now, what evidence was there of any such decision? Why, in the first place, it appeared that a bill was filed by these very complainants in effect, though in the name of the Attorney-General—that is, they got his consent to file it while the cause was pending in this Court, with a view that if they failed in this Court, they could get an injunction in that one. That proceeding was subsequently and in the due performance of his duty, abandoned by the Attorney-General, as a thing in his judgment, we must suppose, unworthy and improper. So far as the parties acted on it, he (Mr. O'Conor) would say it was unwarrantable, because it was against the policy of the law, it was vexatious, —and it was mischievous in the last degree that the same defendants should be harassed by the same plaintiffs with suites for the same purposes in two different Courts at the same time. It was a kind of speculation upon the possible error of Judges, which several statutes had been passed to restrain, and which any man must see was very detrimental to the public interests.

Now, how far had they got here? It was said that because the Judges of the Superior Court had ordered one of the points to be reargued, therefore that was the controlling and conclusive point in the case; and that because they ordered it to be reargued, they had some particular opinion touching the necessity of an ordinance by the Common Council, one way or another—that being the only thing those Judges had the power to make, for the suit was discontinued. The only means of knowing this was through a private letter sent by the learned counsel in the middle of this argument. That was rather a slim sort of a far-reached authority or decision, and it came through too many circuitous channels, and in a form altogether too attenuated, to give to it any force. If the decisions of that Court were to be treated with respect here, and if this Court was bound to depart from its views to acquiesce in theirs, in the name of Heaven let them have that point decided; and then he (counsel) would refer them to the very deliberate opinion in the Broadway Railroad case, in which he (the learned Judge) had solemnly decided that the suit could not be maintained by a tax-payer, and that for an abuse of authority on the part of the people of New-York, the bill must be filed by the State of New-York.

Mr. O'Conor proceeded to reply to the technical points raised by the counsel who preceded him, which he did with his customary learning and force.

The argument was concluded about 3½ o'clock P.M. Decision reserved.

THE JORS-STREET METHODIST CHURCH.

Robert Shaw et al. vs. Benjamin W. Benson et al.—This case, which has occupied considerable public attention, again came up yesterday. Mr. Cutler, for the plaintiffs, first made a motion to the effect that a referee should be appointed by the Court to inquire into the truth of the statements made by both parties during the course of these church troubles. This His Honor promptly denied. Mr. Cutler then moved for an injunction to restrain the defendants from proceeding with the erection of their new Church up town, until after the settlement of this suit. The defendants oppose this, and claim that the matter has been referred to the Methodist Conference by order of the Court, and has already been once settled. They claim that the plaintiffs are new members brought into the Church since the purchase of the property up town, and are now waging war on the wishes and decision of the old and original members. Decision reserved.

The Southern Commercial Convention this year [illegible] as a safety-valve and an extinguisher. The various schemes of the South have had a chance to ventilate their gas and have had the satisfaction of seeing them quietly chucked overboard. The project for reopening the Slave-trade, which was brought forward at the outset of the session, was scarcely honored with notice enough to be called a discussion. No plan of Disunion, we believe, was even presented. The Convention has been mainly occupied with talk about a line of steamers to Europe and the creation of a system of commerce and manufactures which shall make the South independent of the Northern States. Talk on this subject we fear will not amount to much. What is wanted is money, and for that, so far as we see, the South must come to Wall-street.

For a time at all events, we think the Southern gale has blown over. The Autumnal equinox is passed. The South Carolina Legislature even is becoming conservative, and stigmatizes the project of reopening the Slave-trade as a piece of stupid nonsense. The Disunionists have lowered their crests. Even His Excellency Governor ADAMS says he thinks he sees indications that the Union may be preserved a little longer. The announcement fills us with profound satisfaction.

It is clear now that all this bluster has been for effect. It was designed to influence the Presidential Election. And we shall hear no more of it until it may become necessary to coerce or frighten President BUCHANAN, or to elect his successor. We can wait.

A Light at Sea.

It has been observed that collisions at sea are constantly increasing in number. We might naturally expect that—as the highways of the ocean are more closely crowded every year by the messengers of commerce, and lives and property embarked on the sea are placed in greater jeopardy—our navigators would increase their watchfulness, and sail with greater caution than before. But facts seem to contradict every expectation of this kind. With an increase of the risks incident to navigation, many shipmasters seem to increase their recklessness. Fairly at sea, they seem to have no thought of any dangers, except those which may arise from the winds and the waves. Sail is not shortened because the night is dark; nor is the vigilance of a sleepy watch stirred up, except by that ceremonious growl of the officer of the deck to "keep a sharp lookout forward there!"—which means nothing unusual, and is generally answered by a gruff "Aye, aye, Sir!" from under the weather rail. The man at the wheel is so situated that he can see no object about the ship's head; and, even in clear weather, his sight is obstructed by the houses, boats, and hamper which lumber the decks of our modern ships. In fact, as vessels are sailed now-a-days, an escape from a collision is a matter of chance; and, according to reliable statistics, even this chance is becoming smaller every year.

Every shipmaster who makes a collision at sea should be held accountable to a legal tribunal. In almost every instance it will be found that the collision was the result of gross carelessness or stupidity. It cannot be considered merely as an accident, for it might have been avoided by proper care and precaution. It generally occurs at night; and as often on a cloudless as on a dark night. The watch on deck is drowsy; there is no lookout on the forecastle; the helmsman's eye sees nothing below the weather-leech of the topsail; there is no light either on the bowsprit or in the rigging; and the ship presses on her course as if she were sailing alone on a shoreless ocean. What is there to be troubled about, as long as the weather is fair?

In nine cases out of ten, these are the circumstances of every collision at sea; and yet nobody is held accountable!

There is one method which will tend to stop the increase of these disasters. It is a law requiring every sailing vessel to carry a BRIGHT LIGHT, every night at sea. There is no such law now; but in a few well-regulated ships, a regard for safety has established the custom of carrying a light; which, however, is not obligatory. This light should be a strong reflecting lantern, placed on the bowsprit cap; which, though it might not infallibly determine to others a vessel's course—would always show to others that danger is approaching, and would warn them to avoid it. Lights in other parts of the ship would be useless. The sails and rigging would partially conceal them, and their rays, falling on deck, would blind the eyes of a wakeful watch, and prevent objects being distinguished beyond the line of the ship's rail.

The bark Adriatic, which recently ran down the steamship Lyonnais, had no bow lantern. And though Captain DURHAM saw the steamer's lights, and knew what course she was steering, he, showing no light himself, did not think it worth while to take measures to avoid a collision! If he had made his ship visible by a brilliant light in the bow, the steamer would have known exactly where he was and how he was standing, and she could have sheered out of his way when she found that he continued to bear down upon her, before the wind. Captain DURHAM has not been severely blamed for this collision, because, light or no light, he had legally the right of way, in preference to all steamers. But if he had paid as much regard to the value of human lives, as he did to his own legal rights in the case, that dreadful disaster would never have occurred.

There is a universal law for steamers' lights at sea—a bright white light at the foremast head, a green light on the starboard side and a red light on the port side, the colored lights constructed to reflect outward upon the water only. Why should we not have a similar law for lights on sailing vessels at sea? It certainly would tend to prevent those fatal disasters which all who go down to the sea in ships have now great cause to fear.

CONGRESS.—The Senate was not in session yesterday, having adjourned over from Thursday to Monday. In the House, bills were reported from the Committee of Ways and Means, providing for the payment of the Legislative, Executive and Judicial expenses, and for the expenses of the Diplomatic and Consular service. A bill was reported from the Post-Office Committee, authorizing the Postmaster-General to contract with COMMODORE VANDERBILT for carrying a mail between New-York and Southampton, under certain restrictions. An unsuccessful attempt was made to [illegible]

A WORD ON GOOD ADVICE.—Our neighbor of the Herald is a little daft. He is forgetting his usual prudence. The Wall-street explosion, which sent his predictions of panic and universal ruin higher than a kite, has evidently muddled his brains. He devotes column after column of his paper now to advertising the DAILY TIMES. Yesterday's Herald had two or three editorials proclaiming to the world the prodigious influence of the TIMES in keeping up the price of Railroad and other stocks, to something near their real value, in spite of all the efforts of the Herald and JACOB LITTLE to keep them down. The thousands and tens of thousands throughout the country, who have invested their savings in these stocks,—the widows and orphans who are dependent upon the dividends for their income,—will be delighted to learn from the Herald that, in spite of all its endeavors, they are not ruined,—that they have been saved from poverty or serious loss solely and exclusively by the exertions of the Editors and Proprietors of the DAILY TIMES.

For our own part we know not how we can evince sufficient gratitude for this generous and disinterested tribute. The Herald has not been in the habit of paying the TIMES such gratuitous compliments. Its usual course has been to ignore it,—to avoid all allusion to the existence of such a sheet, and to suppress the name of its Editor whenever he happened to take part in any public meeting. We always rather admired the shrewdness of this manœuvre. But we don't know what to make of its sudden abandonment. Perhaps grief, the disappointment of human hopes, the disastrous failure of its well-meant endeavor to ruin everybody connected with railroads, may have had a chastening and softening effect upon the Herald and made it more kindly disposed and less selfish than it used to be. Either this is the explanation of its course or we must seek one in the line of our first suggestion and conclude that the shock has been too much for its prudence.

If the Herald will listen a little to our advice, we may do it some good. It is very bad policy for the Herald thus to bring the TIMES into notice,—especially in connection with its own signal and rather ridiculous failure. Its editor ought not to write for a day or two, but take frequent shower baths and perhaps have his head shaved. When the excitement passes off he will stop talking about the TIMES. The attack, we are confident, is only temporary.

A NAUGHTY BIG BOY SNATCHING HIS LITTLE BROTHERS' POP-GUN.—The Louisville Journal is a very naughty boy. He is big enough and stout enough to fight his own battles with his own fists. But instead of doing so, he has been snatching a funny little weapon which our good-natured neighbor GREELEY invented for the use of the weak little fellows, who edit newspapers without having any fists or brains to do it with. Everybody knows how kind-hearted and charitable brother GREELEY is,—ready always to help anybody that happens to get into trouble. So when he saw how many of these chaps there were about the country who wanted to have a fight with the DAILY TIMES, but couldn't without help, he invented a little pop-gun for them, which was the most popular little thing ever seen. It makes a very loud noise, although there is really nothing in it; and when the small people fire it off and hear the crack it makes, they expect to see the Editor it is aimed at topple over and die immediately. This pleases them just as much as though he should do so,—and as it don't hurt him in the least, it is a very nice and a very useful little instrument. Mr. GREELEY called it the "Little Villain." He never shot it off himself, because he don't need any such small artillery for his newspaper battles. But it has been of the greatest possible service to little editors and politicians, who want to demolish the editor of the TIMES, but haven't anything of their own to do it with. For as much as a year it has kept up a constant and tremendous cracking all over the country. A very large and windy fellow, of the name of CHURCH, who was once Lieutenant-Governor of this State, while he was making a speech at Rochester last Fall got a bit of a bumble-bee buttoned up in his breeches which he thought the TIMES had put there for mischief;—so he blazed away at the Editor with this "Little Villain" pop-gun all one evening, and amused the good people of Rochester very much. Another big, good-looking but rather lubberly boy from South Carolina, of the name of YEADON, a Colonel in General QUATTLEBUM'S army, who traveled all about the country on a sort of exhibition, talking to all sorts of people whether they minded him or not, got a TIMES thistle under his political tail, which all the way home made him frisk and jump about "delightful:"—so when he got back he borrowed this little weapon, (it is in constant use down South,) and has made the little kingdom of South Carolina ring with it ever since, like an empty barrel full of fire-crackers on the Fourth of July.

It has been a wonderful god-send to wormy little boys of this sort all over the country. It is all that has kept the breath of life in a good many of them. And they never ought to forget good Mr. GREELEY, who invented it for them. He has been a better friend to them than Peter Parley or Robert Merry, or any of those old folks. He has done a great deal more for them than Nature ever did.

But what business has the overgrown butcher of the Louisville Journal with such a plaything? Hasn't he got fists and claws and teeth of his own? Can't he answer what the TIMES says about politics in Kentucky in some other way? He ought to be ashamed of himself to be seen with such a noisy and empty little concern,—banging away a thousand miles off as gravely and soberly as if he were bombarding Sebastopol or Cronstadt with one of Capt. WARNER's long-range guns,—or demolishing a Railroad fortress with the Long Bow wielded with such tremendous (kicking) effect by our neighbor, the Herald. Why can't he leave his little brothers, not yet out of petticoats, alone? Why must he be snatching their toys, and running off with what don't belong to him, only for the fun of hearing them pop? We are afraid the Journal is getting to be very foolish and very bad. He has been in bad company. He has joined the Know-Nothings, and they have been teaching him naughty tricks. If he isn't very careful he will come to a bad end. We hope he will give back the pop-gun to Master GREELEY and little Master YEADON, and not snatch it away from them any more.

DEATH OF HENRY CLAY, JR.—We regret to learn from the Mobile Register that this young gentleman died at Montgomery, Ala., on Tuesday morning last, of typhoid fever, after a short illness. He was a son of the great Kentucky statesman, and was himself a young man of great promise. He was a graduate of the University of Virginia, and was a member of the Bar of Mobile. He was a nephew of Mr. CLAY, of Alabama, who was killed in a duel with Mr. DUNCAN, some years ago.

A Very Modest and Reasonable Proposition.—The Providence Post suggests the propriety of Mr. SUMNER's making an apology for his speech which gave offence to Bully BROOKS, when he returns to his seat in the Senate. We do not know who the responsible editor of the Post is, but he is evidently a fish out of water. He belongs on the other side of Mason and Dixon's line, and has clearly made a mistake in locating himself in New-England. There seems to be some question as to what constitutes a South Carolinian, just now, since the Southern papers deny that Mr. HURLBURT, who was born and bred in Charleston, has any right to be considered one. We presume that the editor of the Providence Post will be regarded by Senator BUTLER and the Charleston Mercury as a genuine South Carolinian, whether he were ever within the geographical limits of the Palmetto State or not.

Signs of Encouragement for the Union in South Carolina.—Notwithstanding the indignation of Mr. SIMMS because the people of the North did not want to be bored by his lectures, there is one paper in South Carolina that does not wholly despair of the Union. The Columbia Banner confesses that it has "been agreably disappointed" and "may be mistaken, but thinks it sees a prospect for the continued existence of the confederacy." This is very encouraging, coming from South Carolina. But, on the other hand, a member of the Senate and also of the lower Chamber of the South Carolina Legislature, have offered resolutions "recommending the resumption by the Southern States of that portion of their sovereign power which they have delegated to the General Government for special purposes."

Losses on the Lakes.—If the losses on the great Lakes during the present year are any indication of the amount of commerce on our inland seas, it must have grown enormously since 1848. In that year the losses amounted to but a little over $400,000; in 1853 they had increased to nearly a million; in 1854 they were a little over two millions; but the present year they have already reached the fearful sum of four millions. But, large as this amount is, it does not seem so great when it is viewed in connection with the statement that the commerce of the Lakes passing the St. Clair Flats amounted the present year to more than three hundred millions of dollars, while the coasting trade not included in that estimate amounts to at least a hundred millions more. This looks very much like the course of Empire taking a westerly direction.

Musical.

Lectures on Music.—We notice that a course of Lectures on Music is to be delivered before the Board of Education, by RICHARD STORRS WILLIS Esq., editor of the Musical World. Mr. WILLIS is laboring to impress upon the minds of parents and teachers a sense of the importance of music as a branch of popular education, and these lectures are intended to further that purpose. The lecturer is fully master of his subject, and will treat of it entertainingly as well as ably.

Mendelssohn Union.

This young and prosperous Musical Society (the only one in our City, by the way, which shows any signs of active existence,) gives the first soirée of the season to-night, on which occasion the latest important sacred composition will be produced, namely, M. COSTA's oratorio of "Eli." This work, it will be remembered, was written for and produced at the Birmingham Festival last year, and at once achieved a complete success. It is indeed a creditable evidence of musical enthusiasm that we have it here so soon, and speaks volumes for the Society that has thus exerted itself in its production.

The solos will be sustained by Mesdames DUSEKEY, TIPPLE, ANDEN, HAWLEY, LEACH, and Messrs. GUEST, GEO. HAWES, COSBEY and BELL. Mr. MORGAN is the conductor, and Mr. TEMPLETON will preside at the piano-forte.

PICTORIAL CLIPPER, FOR THE CHRISTMAS AND NEW-YEAR HOLIDAYS.—We have a most magnificent picture representing some of the most noted

HEROES OF THE RING.

This Engraving, and the accompanying description, in itself, will be worth more than the price charged for the PICTORIAL CLIPPER, six cents each.

This Engraving represents FIFTY-two of the most celebrated prize-fighters that have appeared in the field since the days of Figg and Broughton. The design is intended to represent a "friendly meeting of the fancy"—the three celebrated champions of England, Ireland and America, viz.: Tom Cribb, Dan Donnelly and Tom Hyer are seen in the foreground, dressed in the costume of the ring, Hyer occupying a central position, with Cribb and Donnelly on either side. The others are grouped around in various positions, but attired in their ordinary dress, and are deeply intent in observing the movements of the three most prominent gladiators. Of those whose likenesses will appear in this Engraving, in addition to Cribb, Donnelly and Hyer, will be found the following:

1. Figg.	17. Crawley.	33. Gas Man.
2. Broughton.	18. Tom Belcher.	34. Aaron.
3. Mendoza.	19. Jem Belcher.	35. Hudson.
4. Gulley.	20. Gregson.	36. Martin.
5. Humphreys.	21. Jackson.	37. Oliver.
6. Slack.	22. Cannon.	38. Fuller.
7. Pearce.	23. Sullivan.	39. Joe Ward.
8. Taylor.	24. Langan.	40. Gibbons.
9. Caunt.	25. Randall.	41. Shelton.
10. Bendigo.	26. Dutch Sam.	42. Walker.
11. Barker.	27. Baldwin.	43. Scroggins.
12. Johnson.	28. Nichols.	44. Cooper.
13. Molineaux.	29. Morrissey.	45. Baldwin.
14. Deaf Burke.	30. Curtis.	46. Owen.
15. Jem Ward.	31. Harry Jones.	47. Burns.
16. Spring.	32. Lilly.	48. Turner.
	49. Harmer.

Making FIFTY-two capital likenesses in all.

Over Hyer is displayed the American flag; over Cribb, the British; and over Donnelly, the harp of old Erin—all three blended together in harmonious keeping with the design and spirit of the engraving.

This picture has a beautiful border surrounding it, made up of miniature representations of events of sporting circles, such as shooting, sailing, wrestling, running, boxing, cricket, &c., &c., the whole forming one of the most beautiful pictures, in the sporting line, ever gotten up in this country. We have spared no expense in making this engraving, and our entire Pictorial, worthy of the patronage of the sporting fraternity.

Our holiday sheet will also contain engravings of celebrated Oarsmen, Horses, Cricketers, Pedestrians, Trotting Matches, Race Courses, Yachts and Yacht Races, Boats and Boat Races, Sports of the Japanese, Grouse, Duck, Woodcock, and Partridge Shooting, and various other representations of Sports of the Field, &c.

A beautiful Chess Problem, as well as a difficult Draught Position will also appear in the PICTORIAL.

Our TIME TABLE, giving the fastest time ever made by man, beast, steamship, sailing vessel, locomotives, &c., &c., in running, trotting, sailing, steaming, &c., will also be given, with such alterations and corrections as the occurrences of the past six months may render necessary.

Our Pictorial will be printed on a large-sized sheet, and will be sold at 6 cents per copy. 100 copies, $4; 500 copies, $3 50 per hundred; 1,000 copies, $3 25 per hundred.

THE PURITAN COMMONWEALTH.
A Historical Review of the Puritan Government in Massachusetts in its Civil and Ecclesiastical Relations, from its rise to the Abrogation of the First Charter.
Together with some general reflections on the English Colonial Policy, and on the Character of Puritanism.
BY PETER OLIVER.
This work treats on the construction of the Puritan Commonwealth of Massachusetts, its failure to accomplish the end of all good government, its the preservation of good order and the prevention of immorality, its dissensions the Puritan Church, its intolerance, as shown in the persecutions of the Familists, Quakers and Baptists, and its Missionary claims, as compared with those of the Church of England and the Church of Rome; it asserts the gradual degeneracy of the Puritans, after their separation from the great Catholic body, and lastly contains reflections on the English Colonial policy, and on the general character and tendencies of Puritanism.
In 1 vol. 8vo. Price $2 25.

A very remarkable book, which has already attracted much attention among the students of New-England History, and seems likely to give rise to an earnest and interesting controversy on the character and conduct of the Puritan forefathers.

DUER'S
CONSTITUTIONAL JURISPRUDENCE.
A Course of Lectures on the Constitutional Jurisprudence of the United States.
Delivered annually in Columbia College, New-York, by WILLIAM ALEXANDER DUER, LL.D., late President of that Institution.
The second edition, revised, enlarged, and adapted to professional as well as general use.
1 vol. 12mo. Price $1 75.

From the Knickerbocker.
Judge Duer, former President of Columbia College, by his studies as a lawyer, his experience as a politician, a legislator, and a member of the State Judiciary of New-York, was eminently qualified to exhibit the bearing of constitutional law. In a series of lectures originally delivered to the senior class of Columbia College, he has condensed with brevity and with consummate skill the great principles of the Federal Constitution, tracing its working through the various branches of its legislative, executive, and judicial authority; its relations with States abroad, and its regulations with and among the several members of the Confederacy at home. Introductory to the whole is a sketch of the history of the Confederation down to the date of the present Constitution. An appendix supplies the text of several valuable documents, as the article of confederation, the Constitution, and, what is now of timely interest, the ordinance for the Government of the territory of the United States Northwest of the River Ohio. To render this political manual still more available, in addition to its table of contents, it has an admirable analysis of the entire subject of the work, exhibiting its strict unity and logical deduction, while a copious index distributes the numerous topics under appropriate heads, leaving nothing to be desired on the score of convenience and easy intelligibility.

STORY'S POEMS.
POEMS, BY WILLIAM W. STORY.
One vol. 12mo. Price $1.

From the Boston Transcript.
We have read these poems with great pleasure. They are not numerous, but they are all good. The author is an artist who has lived in Italy for some years, and his poems are flooded with the golden sunlight of Italian Summers. Castle Pale is the most finished and elegant poem in the volume. We like its story and its easy versification, its deep tenderness of feeling and the glowing beauty of its scenery. There is grace, delicacy and beauty in almost every page of this elegant volume, which is printed in a style rarely equaled in America.

From the Boston Traveller.
It is not often that eminent success is vouchsafed to one and the same individual in two spheres of art. We do not look to the sculptor for other poetry than that which the silent marble utters, nor to the poet for the statuesque other than it shall appear in the rounded harmony and fine symmetry of the true poem. Mr. Story, however, certainly gives eminent promise in other spheres. The products of his chisel have made him widely known, and have given him a good rank among Young American sculptors. This volume will speak for his abilities as a poet, and will win him a rank not often accorded to an artist of another art.

STUDIES IN THE FIELD AND FOREST.
BY WILSON FLAGG.
"All that the genial ray of morning gilds
And all that echoes to the song of even."
1 vol. 12mo. Price $1.

From North American Review.
These pages indicate an artist's eye and a poet's susceptibility; careful observation of nature; and familiarity with the customs and models of constructive and ornamental art. Which they are written, is a highly attractive style, marked by simplicity and neatness, and adapting itself with easy grace to the theme in hand.

From the Salem Gazette.

From the New-York Mirror: Mrs. Olcott, who is the author of "Ellen Rutten's Trial," has written a book for us. As the author of "Rutten's Trial," she is known to many, and is not easily forgotten. The Torchlight through the Wood, is a work of some interest, in spirit of her gentle and [illegible] manner. From the Boston Post: "If this series of Summer Pictures, of which the Torchlight through the Wood is the first, be fairly indicative of the style and character of the whole, it is a work of great interest to our readers."

[illegible] Senator Douglas, in reply to the charge of Mr. Buchanan and the entire Democracy of the North were in favor of Kansas being made a free state, and so they were, if they could and that to accomplish their object in this manner it became necessary for the whole of them to unite in their support of Mr. Buchanan in the direction of his election, he (Douglas) knew that the charge was true, and did not hesitate to be their openly avowed champion. Douglas, speaking for Mr. Buchanan and the Democracy of the North, boldly proclaimed in the Senate, in reply to the question whether Mr. Buchanan was in favor of making Kansas a free State, that the views of Mr. Buchanan and his friends on that subject were those of "Democrats generally"—that "he was for allowing the people of a Territory or State to make their own institutions to suit themselves; but, like most Northern people, if he could have his choice, he would no doubt prefer that it should be a free State." In reply to the question put still more distinctly "whether Mr. Buchanan believed that the people in a Territorial state have the power to admit or exclude Slavery at their own will," Mr. Bigler responded evasively that he could not speak for Mr. Buchanan on that point, but that he was perfectly willing to give his own views on that point and that his opinion was that the people, through their local Legislature, have the power to admit or exclude Slavery!

Under this doctrine of Squatter Sovereignty, of course Kansas is entitled to be a Free State—and that, as we are told by Senator Douglas, is what Mr. Buchanan decidedly prefers; and, preferring it, the inference is reasonable that he will exert all his official power and influence to prevent Kansas or any other Territory being forced into a Slave State. And this is to be the fruit of his Administration—this the entertainment to be spread out for the Southern people! Our worst apprehensions are thus realized even in advance of his inauguration. Under the Gag-rule he will be enabled to carry out his design of making Texas (and perhaps further Slave States will yet be added to the Union.) That is to be the upshot of all this Southern Locofoco clamor over the rights and institutions of the South.

TERRIBLE MURDER—ESCAPE OF THE MURDERER.—On Friday evening last a man named McAGRAH was murdered near Gibson's Station, on the Michigan Central Railroad, twenty-four miles from this city, by a man named TIMOTHY VOORHAN. It appears that McAGRAH had been in VOORHAN's house, with whom he had some little quarrel on a previous occasion, and while he was sitting on a chair, speaking to VOORHAN's wife, VOORHAN got behind him with an axe, and struck him so hard as to let the axe into McAGRAH's head, up to the handle. After he was struck he got up out of the chair, left the house, and walked about a mile—as ascertained by the track of blood upon the snow—he sat down, where he was found dead shortly afterwards. An inquest was held and the jury returned a verdict that the deceased came to his death by a blow with an axe in the hands of Timothy VOORHAN. VOORHAN was at the house adjoining during the time of the inquest, but through the negligence of the Justice he was not arrested. He has fled to parts unknown.—Chicago Tribune.

ARREST OF COUNTERFEITERS OF UNITED STATES COIN.—Last night and this morning several persons were arrested on the charge of making and issuing spurious half and quarter dollars and ten cent pieces. The principal, and a member of the gang, passed at a restaurant last evening and tendered one of the bogus pieces in payment for some refreshments which they had obtained. The two were followed and taken into custody. On their persons, besides good money, was found a considerable quantity of bogus. The prisoners were locked up at once. About 1 o'clock this morning the material used in making the bogus coin was recovered at a house in the northwestern part of the city, and another arrest was made. At the present time we forbear making public any further details.—Phila. Evening Bulletin, 11th.

A Correspondent at St. Catherines, Canada West, says:—"A very great error is made by United States correspondents, who sometimes pay the postage to the line—3 cents—which is of no avail, and is lost, as letters come with the full charge, 10 cents. By the postal arrangements between the two countries, it is optional to pay, or not to pay; but a partial payment, on either side, is 'struck off' by postmasters."

Other remedies are worse than useless. It alone cures that it never returns; removes the disease without leaving its poison in the blood to contaminate the system and break out constitually. Price $1. Sold at Dr. Ward's, No. 80 Canal-st., three doors east of Broadway.

MEDICAL AND SURGICAL OFFICE ESTABLISHED IN 1830.—Dr. COBBETT, No. 19 Duane-st., opposite the Chatham Bank, may be consulted with confidence on all diseases of a private character. His long experience and attention to this class of complaints, his pleasant, safe and expeditious mode of treatment, his extraordinary success during a long and extensive practice of 26 years at his present office, enable him confidently to promise to all persons so afflicted, a safe and radical cure, without injury to the constitution or confinement from business. In the age of empiricism when ignorant practitioners and impudent quacks are daily spreading their nets to lure the unwary to destruction, Dr. C. would wish to raise a friendly and warning voice to his fellow creatures, and tell them to beware of such dangerous persons. Strictures—None but experienced Surgeons should undertake to cure this complaint. Dr. C. can cure the worst form of Stricture in from two to four weeks. Constitutional debility brought on by a secret habit indulged in by young men effectually cured. N. B.—Dr. COBBETT is a member of the University of the City of New-York. See his diploma in his office with the names of Mott, Pattison, &c., attached thereto, and the only member of the above College in this specialty in this City. Charges moderate, and a cure guaranteed in all cases.

CHRONIC AND CONSTITUTIONAL DISEASES.—Dr. RALPH, No. 643 Houston-st., near Wooster, (at home till 1 and after 6 o'clock, Sundays excepted,) invites the attention of sufferers from stricture, in every stage, to his peculiar and eminently successful treatment. From long application and extended experience in this complaint, he can guarantee perfect and radical cures, without painful operations, nauseous medicines or troublesome restrictions. The sympathetic or distant symptoms of this disease are generally misunderstood. Pain or weakness in the back, bad memory, loss of mental energy, and inaptitude for business or pleasure, genital debility, costiveness, dyspepsia, may all depend upon stricture as their hidden cause, long before it affects the urinary stream; and, especially when there has been previous disease, such symptoms should lead to the question, may this be their real cause. With its cure these symptoms quickly disappear. All letters, to insure attention, must inclose a fee. Address Box No. 869 Post-Office. Strangers visited at their Hotel if necessary.

DR. MAGNIN'S LUCINA CORDIAL, OR ELIXIR OF LOVE.—This delightful and positive invigorant of the human system is fast superseding all other remedies; in fact, when its virtues become fully known it will be the only remedy in use. Its action on the nervous system and reproductive organs is most extraordinary; allaying all over-excitement, and infusing into the nervous organization that degree of tension which is requisite to give the human system the enjoyment of its full powers, both mentally and physically. As an aphrodisiac it is equally remarkable; combining with the gastric juices of the stomach, it insists them in more readily dissolving all nutritious substances, and converting them into pure and wholesome blood; thus the digestion is improved and the whole framework of man moves on in a more vigorous and harmonious manner thereby. Price $2 per bottle, or two bottles for $5. Principal office, No. 71 Maiden-lane. DR. MAGNIN.

DENTISTRY.

CONTINUOUS GUM TEETH.—THE SUIT lately pending against me in the United States Circuit Court, for an infringement of the patent of ALLEN'S Continuous Gum Teeth, having been decided in my favor, I am now prepared to manufacture full or partial sets of my Improved Continuous Gum Teeth, on my [illegible] atmospheric pressure plates, which are superior to any now in use, and which can be inserted with or without extracting the roots. Persons in want of artificial teeth can save 50 per cent. by calling at my office, where specimens of all the new styles of Dentistry can be seen. Having every facility, I am now prepared to manufacture for the profession, or give instructions in the art. I have recently discovered a new process of benumbing the gums for the extraction of teeth, and which can be used in all cases without the slightest pain to the patient. It is entirely different from the process of freezing the gums, which can only be used in few cases, and generally produces more pain than the extraction of the tooth.

MEETING OF THE NATIONALITIES.

[illegible] Europe and America in the Hall of the Empire Club.

The advertising columns of the newspapers for some days back have contained an announcement that a grand public meeting of the "Nationalities of Europe and America" was to be held in the hall of the Empire Club last night. Our curiosity was greatly excited by the prospect. In what particular shape "the Nationalities" were to come was a matter of pleasant speculation—and how the hall of the Empire Club was to hold them all, was still more wonderful.

As if to arouse public expectation to the highest pitch of excitement it was added that D. Webster Jones, Esq., would "take the chair" at 8 o'clock.—Jones, Esq., would be present. To see the "nationalities" and the "leading men" of two continents together with D. Webster Jones" in the chair, was certainly a tempting programme.

Of course our corps of Reporters was on the spot. They went early. They waited. They watched the hands of the clock. Eight o'clock came and D. Webster Jones—for nobody else wanted it. Our Reporters wanted to see the "Nationalities." Like all large bodies they moved slow and came late. About twenty rather good-looking gentlemen with beards dropped in gradually, and were supposed to be the "Nationalities." D. Webster Jones threw some deaths on the Reporters for the absence of the above named. He said the American Nationalities wished to be supposed that the whole thing would be managed by the European Nationalities, and therefore stay away and let the European Nationalities come forward. It would be managed by the Russians, Germans, and so they staid away. The p[illegible] was that nobody was there. But a [illegible] was published after some of the [illegible] had gone home, supposed to be attending Mr. Jones's lecture. When he came back he reported that the Nationalities in question had gone home and went to bed. D. Webster Jones accordingly left the chair, and it stands there yet.

The Nationalities of Europe and America evidently don't read the newspapers, or else they don't know where the hall of the Empire Club is.

Political.

There is to be a Republican meeting this evening at the Tabernacle, at which Senator WILSON, Edt. THAYER, and several other distinguished gentlemen are announced to speak.

More evidences of the grand festival which our City Republicans intend to be the winding up of the Presidential canvass. We are requested to state, by way of correcting sundry malicious rumors that have been in vogue, that the people of the affair will be devoted to the relief of the destitute in Kansas.

Schoolhouse in the Seventeenth Ward.

A new fashionable school edifice, to be known as the Seventeenth Ward Grammar School No. 13, has been erected during the past Summer, on the site of old public school No. 14, on Houston, between Ludlow and Essex streets. The external form of the structure is that of a double cross, similar to No. 11, in Seventeenth-street. The internal arrangement gives seven large, well-lighted, and perfectly ventilated classrooms on the two upper floors, designed for the girls' and boys' grammar schools. The stairways, constructed of stone, are arranged so as to permit the teachers' desks in the main room, to occupy equidistant partially surrounded by a circular partition which is reached by entrances on either side. Between this circular partition and the outer wall of the building, are arranged the rooms used for the Drawing classes, on each floor, in the place usually occupied by the main stairways.

These drawing-rooms are fitted up with substantial tables to accommodate classes of forty-two pupils each. The furniture in the main room consists of long cheery desks and comfortable chairs, of a modern construction, in the place of the milking stools lately in vogue.

Back of the main class-rooms will seat sixty-four pupils each. Each grammar school can accommodate 768 pupils comfortably. There are bells and wash-basins, wardrobes and bookcases on each floor, with shelves fixed in the walls of the class-rooms.

The Primary Department is furnished with long desks, running lengthwise on either side of the main room, with comfortable modern primary chairs. The gallery in connections and the seats are as comfortable as can be made of two boards placed together at nearly a right angle for a seat and a back. Separate chairs, modeled to the form, would be less cruel for such little ones.

The play grounds extend under a great part of the building, and are inclosed from the weather. The buildings are to be warmed by means of wood-stoves.

A suite of rooms for the janitor is arranged in the rear, occupying the ground-floor and the basement cellar.

The Trustees' rooms and the library-room occupy the greater floor by the front entrances.

No. 13 will open on the 22d inst. The whole number of pupils that can be comfortably seated is 2,150. For a model, the building is practically completed according to specification, and cost no more than was originally stipulated.

The Ladies' Hospital Fair.

The Fair which was opened at Stuyvesant Institute on Thursday evening last, for the benefit of a Women's Hospital in this City, has met, as it merits, with very liberal patronage. The attraction of the exhibition has been greatly enhanced by presents from London, of a number of valuable paintings, and a work entitled The Three Sisters, written for the benefit of the Hospital. From the Ladies' Physiological Institute of Boston and vicinity, many valuable specimens of fancy needle work, engraving and painting in water colors, have been received. Philadelphia has sent some pretty needle work, and many fancy articles. Donations of money and articles of value have been received from Syracuse and Ithaca, and from New-Bedford and elsewhere, all of which render the Fair a very agreeable place, and one well worth visiting. And, while we are speaking of it, we may as well inform those intending to patronize it, that there is a donation pyramid, presided over by Dr. ELIZABETH BLACKWELL, that they must not forget to patronize carefully. The Fair is under the direction of Drs. ELIZABETH and EMILY BLACKWELL, and MARIA E. ZAKRZEWSKA. An excellent piano has been procured, and during the evening hours good music may be enjoyed. It is probable that the Fair will not close before next week.

LECTURES OF LAST EVENING.—Last night, at the Allen-street Church, came off the last of the series of afternoon and evening lectures, delivered under the auspices of the Methodist City Sunday School Society, by Rev. GEORGE C. M. ROSSMER, M. D., of Baltimore. Scripture history has been the principal subject, and which he has illustrated by the Dioptric Lantern. The proceeds were to be applied to the assistance of the industrial and mission schools of the Society.

Captain ROSSMER, of the Marion, addressed an audience at Clinton Hall, last evening, concerning Mexico and its people.

Dr. G. A. BAUMGARTEN delivered the second of his three lectures last night, on the Characteristics of Modern Civilization, at Hope Chapel. He had a good house.

☞ The full moon secures us magnificent evenings. The weather has been unusually mild—thus far into the Fall closely imitating the precedent of last Winter. We had a handsome snow storm one morning last week, but before night all the snow that had fallen had turned into Ebling mud. If our authorities had the slightest disposition to clean the streets preparatory to the frozen term, they would employ every hour at the work—but we haven't heard of anybody engaged in that old-fashioned employment. The drivers of the ash carts, even, look as if they were conferring a great favor to half empty the barrels that are placed on the sidewalk. Indeed, we expect every day that they will pull at our door bells and announce that they shall serve us no more without some consideration for their labor.

☞ Mayor WOOD having asked of the Police Captains the names of the target companies in their respective districts, the following facts have been discovered as to the number of companies which have paraded during the year from each Ward: First Ward, 31; Second, 31; Third, 3; Fourth, 49; Fifth, 29; Sixth, 15; Seventh, 21; Eighth, 31; Ninth, 23; Tenth, 36; Eleventh, 54; Twelfth, 6; Thirteenth, 30; Fourteenth, 19; Fifteenth, 7; Sixteenth, 21; Seventeenth, 30; Eighteenth, 13; Nineteenth, 19; Twentieth, 19; Twenty-first, 19; Twenty-second, 8. Total, 387. The number of men training with these companies amounts to less than 26,000.

☞ St. Luke's Hospital is nearly completed, but they are laying down a sewer in Fifty-fourth street, which prevents the opening of the Hospital for some time yet. They are funds enough in hand to complete the building, but to furnish and endow it liberal Episcopalians must open their purses.

☞ The shortest day of the year is the 21st of this month. The afternoons of this week are the shortest of the year—shorter even than that of the 21st will be. The Sun sets at 32 minutes after 4.

☞ The net proceeds of Mr. MEAGHER's lecture for the benefit of the widow and child of Capt. KEEGAN, are over $200.

☞ The steamboat State of Maine, of the Boston line, did not arrive until 8 o'clock P. M., being detained by a heavy gale on the Sound.

Board of Councilmen.

The Board of Councilmen met on Friday evening, the President, B. F. PINCKNEY, Esq., in the Chair.

The first business was the resumption of the consideration of the propriety of purchasing the property belonging to Mr. LOWNSZ, for a Market. [illegible] Councilman HART advocated the measure.

After some attempts to amend on the part of Councilman SWAN and others, the main question being put, namely the acceptance and adoption of the Report and Resolution, it voted affirmatively; 14 negatively. A number of bills were then read for a third time and passed. A resolution was presented by Councilman VAN TINE to widen the roadway by taking off 5 feet from the curb-stone to the iron railing on the Park side of Broadway from Chambers-street to the Astor House. Referred to Committee on Streets.

The Board then adjourned.

Coroners' Inquests.

Coroner HILL held an inquest yesterday, at the New-York Hospital, on the body of JAMES NEELY, who died, yesterday morning, from injuries received from falling, on the day previous, from his cart, in Fulton-street. The evidence showed that the deceased, while loading some shovels on his cart, in some way accidentally slipped, and fell upon the pavement on his head. The Jury rendered a verdict accordingly. Deceased was 45 years old, and a native of Ireland, and leaves a family.

An inquest was held by Coroner CONNERY yesterday, at No. 52 Pack-street, upon the body of a child 8 years old, which came to its death by inhaling steam from putting its mouth to the spout of a tea-kettle filled with boiling water. The verdict of the Jury is worth copying. It is as follows:

"That DANIEL SHEA, the deceased, came to his death by being accidentally scalded in putting its mouth to the pipe of a kettle of water on the stove, and inhaling the steam, which so severely scalded the child's throat, as to cause inflammation and subsequent death. We consider the parents for their carelessness in being in the room at the time the child went to the stove and inhaled the steam."

Fire in Broadway.

At 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon a fire was discovered in the attic of the store and dwelling-house No. 719 Broadway. The fire caught from an imperfection in the flue, but was speedily extinguished with but trifling damage. The attic was occupied by Mrs. LEAVES.

☞ To the Mercantile Library Association, during the last six months, 517 new members have been added, all of whom were clerks except 90. There have been 960 new volumes added, and 37,000 volumes taken from the library by visitors, besides those consulted in the reading room. Total number of visitors, 49,000. The expenditures reached $4,650.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

PASSING COUNTERFEIT MONEY.

Another complaint was made yesterday, before Justice FLANDREAU, against John Manning, for passing counterfeit money. Manning, it will be remembered, was the young sailor whose arrest for passing counterfeit money was mentioned in Thursday's TIMES. The complainant in the last case is John R. Russell, of No. 66 Canal-street, who charges that the prisoner, on last Saturday evening, passed at his store a counterfeit five dollar bill on the Southwark Bank of Philadelphia. Justice FLANDREAU yesterday passed the papers over to the District-Attorney for presentation to the Grand Jury.

GOT INTO BAD COMPANY.

James McNARA, residing at No. 63 West Broadway, on Thursday night partook of a porter-house steak, at No. 149 Worth-street, in company with Mary Ann Sullivan. After the steak they adjourned to Mary Ann's residence, where McNARA left, but shortly afterwards found himself minus two ten-dollar gold pieces. He caused the arrest of Mary Ann yesterday, and she was brought before Justice CONNOLLY. The arrested female indignantly denied the theft, and alleges that she was out of the City Thursday night. Justice CONNOLLY, however, fully committed her for trial, in default of $500 bail.

KEEP AN EYE ON HIM.

Some petty but bold swindler yesterday afternoon rung the door bell of the private residence No. 8 Bond-street, and informed the girl coming to the door that he had been sent there from Mr. Commerford's chair factory for a large arm chair, which he had been ordered to alter. The girl crediting the fellow's statement, handed over the chair, which he carried away, and has not been heard of since. The Police are looking for him.

A PETER FUNK IN COURT.

Charles Parkhurst, keeper of a mock-auction store at No. 15 City Hall-place, two or three days since procured the arrest of a young man named John Bogart, charging him with having stolen a watch from his premises. The prosecutor and prosecuted both appeared yesterday morning before Judge CAMPBELL, while holding Special Sessions at the Tombs. The facts developed in the examination show that Bogart, and a young man accompanying him, arrived in the City last Monday from Peekskill. They went, shortly after their arrival, into the auction-shop of the prosecutor, and while there Bogart bid off at $8 a watch which was represented as a gold one, but which proved to be brass. Seeing how he had been taken in, and as they would not give him his money back, he grabbed another watch and made away with it. Parkhurst confessed keeping a mock-auction shop, and would not affirm that any bona fide bidders were in the place when the brass watch was sold to the accused.

The case terminated with the discharge of young Bogart, and the institution of proceedings against Mr. Funk.

LONG ISLAND.

Fire in Brooklyn—Accidents.

At 10¾ o'clock, last night, a fire broke out in the third story of building No. 38 Fulton-street, which was entirely consumed with most of its contents. It was occupied by Messrs. PATRIDGE, BROTHERS, as a chair manufactory, and owned by the heirs of JOHN B. GARDNER. The building was brick, four stories high, and extended through from Fulton to Doughty-street, a distance of 100 feet, and was valued at $8,000. The Messrs. PATRIDGES' loss is estimated at $10,000, partially insured in Philadelphia offices. The fire was first discovered by Officer CASRAW, of Justice SMITH's Court, who gave the alarm, and, with a number of citizens, succeeded in saving a small portion of the contents.

A young man, named SNEDIKER, was knocked down by an engine on Fulton-street and severely injured. He was taken to his residence, on Vanderbilt-avenue. A fireman was also run over, but the extent of his injuries we could not learn. The fire is said to have originated from spontaneous combustion in the rear part of the third story, where paints were used.

☞ It is proposed to open a "Children's Aid Society" in Brooklyn, which shall employ a Secretary and Visitors, to gather up outcast little ones, as does the similar association in New-York, and furnish them with homes in the country. This can be done with little comparative expense, as the machinery of the New-York Children's Aid Society is ready at hand, and they offer their cordial and constant cooperation. An office, in the basement of the City Hall, has been gratuitously provided by the liberality of the Common Council. A Secretary of much experience in similar operations among the poor, Rev. J. P. ROOT, has been engaged, who will, until sufficient funds come in, act as the sole visitor among the poor. Parties who know the address of poor families in which there are unemployed children, are invited to send in information of such to Mr. ROOT. Cast-off clothing, donations of any kind, will be appreciated by the movers in this benevolent enterprise. An appeal to the Brooklyn public, in its behalf, has been made by CHARLES L. BRACE, Esq., Secretary of the New-York Society.

☞ Rev. CORTLAND W. AVARIS was installed as Pastor of the Washington-avenue Baptist Church, Brooklyn, on Thursday evening last. Rev. Dr. GRAVES, of New-York, delivered the sermon of the occasion. There is a better distribution of prices this week than usual on the Bond list, though the transactions are not large.

The reports, to-day, about the Money market from the Stock and Discount Brokers are the reverse of each other. The latter find a good demand for prime paper at 5@9 ₩ cent., and fair average lists of names at 10 ₩ cent. The Stock people found demand loans difficult to come at, arising from two or three causes, the chief of which, for the day, is attributed to the calling in of money by the Bank holding the City Deposits, which has been the heaviest lender on demand for a week or two past. The Wall-street Banks have been losing some specie to the South as well as to Europe, which adds to the closeness of this week. The mercantile payments at bank continue to be met with ease and promptness. The Sub-Treasury received, to-day, $199,308; paid out $185,949, and had at the close $11,687,560. We hear that the sale yesterday of the Buffalo and New-York City Road, under foreclosure of the second mortgage, netted $275,000 above the first mortgage of $1,200,000 on the road, and $250,000 accrued interest. Only part of the equipment has yet been sold, say to the amount of $65,000—making the whole auction value of the concern, thus far, about $1,740,000.

The Bankers' mail by the Africa delivered this morning is an encouraging one. The advices from London and Paris are favorable for their own Money markets, and show an improved tone for American Securities. We are permitted to copy the following from a well-informed source in the American business in London.

LONDON, Friday, Nov. 28, 1856.

This mail will take very much more favorable accounts of our markets than you have had for some time past and also of the markets for money on the Continent.

We are likely to have a rapid reduction in the rate of interest and if all goes well and reciprocally on your side, American securities will be in favor.

Your Bears do great mischief abroad by the circulation of damaging reports regarding Stocks and Bonds, as people do not like their investments loosely pulled about, however well they may be assured of their being good in every way, and we Brokers who stand between the buyers and sellers, have by no means a comfortable position when rumors of over issue and fraud are passing current with securities you have recommended for investment the day before. Of course your present low prices are attributed by the uninitiated public to the want of security, and from Wall-street there is a constant emanation of rumors sufficient to keep up that idea.

We do what we can to spread sounder views in regard to your securities among investing classes, but it is difficult to fight against such well-fed prejudices. Great damage is likewise done to companies in the position of the Erie, doing nothing for their shareholders when they have fairly earned dividends for them; the common idea is that they do not earn anything, and that is the reason they do not pay. In some cases there would be no damage to shareholders in withholding dividends for a time but in the case of the Erie it is now becoming unjust, when it adds to the distrust of depressed markets.

The London Times has been allowed to drop too easily out of their unpardonable publication of the letter headed "Georgian Railways and Revolvers," and their still less excusable leader on the subject.

The Daily News is already recognized in the city as a superior authority, and if the Times makes many more exhibitions of temper and prejudice, such as it has lately done, in treating of American matters, we shall probably see a rapid decline from that high position which has apparently become so familiar to the Editors; they are losing a proper sense of its immense elevation, and the rare chance by which it is attainable.

The November receipts on the Cleveland and Columbus road were $114,848, against $113,746 same month last year.

The earnings of the Bellefontaine and Indiana Railroad Company, for October, were as follow:

October, 1856....$43,998 53|October, 1855....$29,260 05
Increase nearly 50 ₩ cent.....$14,738 48

The earnings of the Indiana, Pittsburg and Cleveland Railroad Company (lately Bellefontaine and Indianapolis) were:

October, 1856....$34,489 35|October, 1855....$25,953 67

The earnings of the Norwich and Worcester Railroad Company were:

November, 1856..$25,203 24|November, 1855..$25,056 20

The suspension of Mr. PIERCE BUTLER, of Philadelphia, who has been a large operator in Stocks, is referred to by the Pennsylvania papers of this morning.

The engagements of Specie for the steamer Arago for Havre and Southampton are reported at about $400,000. There was very little done in Sterling for this packet. French bills firm on a fair demand at 5 20@5 18¾.

It turns out that the allusion in the paragraph which we copied from the Commercial, yesterday, was to Mr. W. R. THOMPSON, an old employe in the Courier and Enquirer office, in the market department of the paper. The affair is thus alluded to by the Courier:

"Taking advantage of the friendly and close relations subsisting between the Courier and Enquirer and the principal financial houses of this City, he obtained, it appears, from several of them, on his own individual credit, the very day the steamer sailed, some twenty thousand dollars, in cash, bills and bonds, with which he decamped. The fact, which first became known to us yesterday, has amazed us beyond measure. Mr. THOMPSON had been known to this mercantile community for more than a quarter of a century, and has uninterruptedly enjoyed its complete confidence, as well as our own. He had an interesting family, had an income sufficient to maintain it in comfort, had no extravagant tastes or habits, never, as far as we have been able to discover, indulged to the least extent in speculation, was not involved, so far as we know, in any pecuniary embarrassment, and was almost the last man we should have suspected of betraying his trusts and yielding to the temptation that has ruined him. It is to us inexplicable infatuation."

The Dry Goods Import for the week is $1,127,561, against $573,120 the corresponding week of last year. The following is the summary:

Our regular correspondents, Messrs. ROBERT BENSON & Co., write:

Per Africa.] LONDON, Friday, Nov. 28, 1856.

We have to notice a continuance of that returning confidence to which we alluded in our last Circular, and greater ease in our Money market—although there has been no reduction made in the minimum rate of discount at the Bank of England. This improvement has arisen chiefly from the more cheerful accounts from Paris, and a strong belief that we shall now see the specie reserves of the Bank of England gradually increase. Although the Directors have not made any reduction in the rate of discount, they have modified their recent resolution, and reverted to their usual practice of making advances on Government Stocks during the closing of the Books for the payment of the next Dividend. In the general discount market the current rates are rather under those of the Bank.

Our Stock markets during the week have been buoyant. In our last Circular we quoted Consols at 93⅝ for money, and 93⅝@⅞ for 4th December. They have, with slight variations, continued to improve, and we now quote them 94¼@⅜ for money, and 94⅜@⅝ for 4th December.

There has been considerable animation in the market for American Securities, and an active demand for some of the leading Railroad Bonds. Erie Bonds of 1868 have changed hands at 84@84¾; 1862 Bonds at 82; 1871 Bonds at 79¾, and the Sinking Fund Bonds at 88. New-York Central 6 ₩ cent. Bonds at 91. Michigan Central Bonds of 1869 at 84. Illinois Central 7 ₩ cent. Construction Bonds at 94. Pennsylvania Bonds at 95, and the shares of this Company at 19¾, 19¾ and 14 premium. State Stocks are rather firmer in price. Pennsylvania 5 ₩ cent. Stock has been

FRIDAY, Dec. 12—P. M.

A good demand continues to obtain for Stocks at the Brokers' Board, and prices were generally firm at the early session, though closing a fraction off in the afternoon. The largest business was done in Reading Shares, about 11,000, opening 84⅝, selling up to 85⅝, buyer 10 days, and closing 85⅝, sales regular way. There was some realizing on New-York Central, and the quotation of the morning, 94⅝ ₩ cent., lost ⅛@⅜ ₩ cent. at the Second Board. Both the Michigan Roads and Cleveland and Toledo were from ⅛ to 1 ₩ cent. dearer than on Thursday, and Galena and Chicago touched 120, buyer 60 days. The English mail brought some orders for Illinois Central Scrip, which sold as high as 119⅝ and for the Construction Bonds, which were done at 94⅝@⅞. The price of Erie holds on remarkably steady, equally free for the moment from any apparent Bull or
